SEC. 3. That in order to accommodate the increasing passenger, mail, express, and other traffic in the city of Washington the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall have and be possessed of the right, which is hereby granted and conferred, to occupy and use, on the conditions hereinafter mentioned, that portion of the Mall lying between B street SW. and B street NW. as the southerly line of said B street NW. is hereinafter defined, and between the west line of Sixth street and a line drawn parallel therewith and 340 feet west thereof, and to erect and maintain thereon a station building and appurtenances, train sheds, tracks, and sidings in connection therewith suitable and adequate for the convenient accommodation of said traffic; and the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall, in connection with its occupation and use of the portion of the Mall hereby granted, locate, construct, and maintain beneath its tracks and structures on the line of West Capitol street, as shown on the city maps, a substantial arch or arches not less than 200 feet in width, as a public passageway for vehicular and pedestrian traffic (as shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia), which shall be so constructed as to afford roadways and sidewalks; and the said company shall also pave the said passageways at the time of their construction to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, but thereafter the maintenance of the pavement and roadways shall devolve upon the said District of Columbia.

TEMPORARY TRACKS.

SEC. 4. That if it should at any time be deemed necessary or advisable, in the construction of the works herein authorized, to lay temporary tracks on any street or avenue to accommodate the business of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company pending the completion of such works, the said company may lay such temporary tracks, subject to the approval and under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall remove the same and restore every such street or avenue to its former condition, to the satisfaction of said Commissioners, within sixty days after the completion of the works herein authorized.

REMOVAL OF FISH COMMISSION BUILDING.

SEC. 5. That the United States Fish Commission building and appurtenances, now located on that part of the Mall hereby granted to said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, shall be removed therefrom and rebuilt on the said Mall west of the portion thereof so granted to said railroad company, under the directions of, and according to plans approved by, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army; and the cost of such removal and rebuilding shall be defrayed by the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding $40,000: Provided, That the expense of such removal and rebuilding in excess of $40,000 shall be paid by the United States.

RETAINING WALLS.

SEC. 6. That in elevating or depressing its tracks, as hereinbefore authorized, the said railroad company is hereby required to support the sides of all embankments and excavations made in the streets wherein the same are located with suitable retaining walls of stone. These walls, in case of excavation, shall be carried to a height of 4 feet above the revised grades of said streets, or shall be provided with suitable iron railings. The space to be occupied and used by the said railroad company where its tracks are depressed on Maryland avenue shall not exceed 58 feet between the inside faces of the parallel retaining walls, measured at the level of the said tracks, as shown on said plans and profiles.

STREETS TO BE VACATED.

SEC. 7. That to enable said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to effect the revision, change, and improvement in the alignment and grade of its railroad, and the relocation of parts thereof as authorized and contemplated by this act, the following-named streets and crossings in said city of Washington shall be, upon the completion of the work herein authorized, completely vacated and abandoned for public use, namely:

Canal street, as located and shown on the city maps, between South Capitol street and New Jersey avenue.

G street SE. and H street SE., between South Capitol street and New Jersey avenue.

I street SE., between First and South Capitol streets.

Virginia avenue, on the south side of the said railroad, between Second street and Four-and-a-half street SW., and on the north side of the said railroad between Four-and-a-half street and Seventh street SW.

Maryland avenue, on the south side of said railroad, between Ninth and Tenth streets SW.

Maryland avenue, between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets SW.; and in consideration of, and in connection with, the vacation of said portion of Maryland avenue between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets SW., the said railroad company shall acquire and dedicate to the District of Columbia the necessary property to increase the present width of D street SW., between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets SW., 30 feet on the south side thereof.

Thirteenth and Thirteen-and-a-half streets, between D and Water streets SW., and

E street SW. between Twelfth street SW. and Water street.

The following-named streets are hereby vacated and abandoned, namely:

F street SW. and E street SW. where they cross the said railroad;

D street SW. between Four-and-a-half and Sixth streets SW.;

C street SW. between Sixth and Seventh streets SW.: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the public authorities from entering upon vacated and abandoned streets and avenues for the purpose of locating, constructing, maintaining, or repairing therein sewers, water mains, gas mains, conduits, or other underground construction necessary for the public comfort, convenience, or health: And provided further, That no portion of any street shall be closed under authority of this act until said railroad company shall have secured control of the property abutting upon said portion to be closed, it being the intent hereof that no property owner shall be deprived of egress from or ingress to his property.

CHANGES IN GRADE; WIDENING B STREET.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make all such changes in the lines and grades of any street or streets in said city as may be reasonably required or deemed necessary or advisable in connection with the revision, change, improvement, and partial relocation of said railroad by this act contemplated, and particularly are authorized and directed to widen B street NW., on its southerly side, between Sixth and Seventh streets, so as to conform to the southerly line of said street as it now exists west of Seventh street, and to widen Seventh street on its easterly side between B street NW. and the northerly line of West Capitol street, as shown on the city maps, as follows: For a distance of 130 feet south from the southerly line of said B street NW., when widened as herein authorized, to a width of 220 feet, and for the residue of the distance to the northerly line of West Capitol street to a width not exceeding 130 feet.

GARFIELD PARK.

SEC. 8. That in consideration of and in connection with the changes and improvements to be made in the said railroad by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in conformity with the requirements of this act, the said railroad company shall have and be possessed of the right and privilege, which are hereby expressly granted and conferred, to occupy and use, for tracks and other corporate purposes, all that portion of reservation 17, now known as Garfield Park, which lies to the southward of its main tracks when located as authorized by this act, as well as that portion thereof which shall be occupied by said main tracks as located on said plans and profiles; and also the like right and privilege to occupy and use, for similar purposes, the parts or portions of the several streets and crossings which are by this act vacated and abandoned.

DIVISION OF COSTS.

SEC. 9. That the entire cost and expense of the revision, changes, relocations, and improvements of and in said railroad, as authorized and required by the preceding sections of this act, and of all structures connected therewith or incidental thereto, shall be borne, paid, and defrayed in manner following, to wit: The said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall bear, pay, and defray all cost and expense of the relocations, elevation, and depression of its tracks within the limits of its right of way as are authorized and required by this act, including the construction of so much of the bridges conveying streets over its tracks, right of way, and other property as shall be within the limits thereof, and the reconstruction within such limits of the streets which shall be carried beneath the same, the cost and expense of removing its tracks from Sixth street north of Virginia avenue, and from K street and Canal street, and the restoration of such parts of said streets for the uses of the public; the cost and expense of constructing and maintaining the arch or arches for passageways underneath its said tracks located on the Mall, as well as the original cost of paving the roadways and sidewalks to be located within the said passageways; and all other costs, expenses, and damages resulting from, incidental to, or connected with the revisions, changes, and improvements in alignment and grades of said railroad, or the relocations thereof by this act required and authorized, and from changes in the grades of the streets or the railroad, and the lawful operation of the said railroad upon the location and structures contemplated and required by this act, and whether to property owners affected thereby or otherwise, as well as the cost and expense of all street approaches to said company's tracks and right of way, whether overhead by means of bridges or under grade, shall be borne, paid, and defrayed in manner following, to wit: Fifty per cent thereof by the United States and the remaining 50 per cent thereof by the District of Columbia, which last-mentioned 50 per cent shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

All work within the limits of the said railroad company's right of way, including the bridges within said limits, shall be done by said railroad company to the satisfaction and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized to exercise such supervision over the same as may be necessary to secure the proper construction and maintenance of the said work. And all work which is without the limits of the right of way of said railroad company shall be done by the District of Columbia.

PROPERTY TO BE ACQUIRED BY PURCHASE OR CONDEMNATION.

SEC. 10. That to enable the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to effectuate the purposes contemplated and authorized by this act, the said company be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to acquire, either by purchase or condemnation, as hereinafter provided, and, when so acquired, to use the same for tracks and other corporate purposes, and make all such improvements thereon and thereto as may be deemed necessary, the following properties, to wit: All of squares 462, 463, 463 south, and 493; and also as much land as may be required for tracks and other corporate purposes which lies to the south of the present main tracks of the company between South Capitol and First streets southeast and north of the northerly line of M street: Provided, however, That if land shall be acquired south of the present railroad yards and between South Capitol and First streets southeast as in this section authorized the said railroad company shall, when so required by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, make adequate and suitable provision for carrying such streets as may intersect the same across the tracks which shall be located thereon by overhead bridges in a manner satisfactory to the said Commissioners: Provided further, That the cost and expense of raising grades of streets and all approaches to such bridges shall be borne and defrayed by the District of Columbia.

In case the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company can not for any reason agree with the owner or owners for the purchase, use, or occupation of any of the land it is authorized to acquire by purchase or condemnation, then the same may be acquired by the said company in the same manner and by the same procedure as are provided by sections 648 to 663, both inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia. And it shall be lawful for said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to extend and construct, from time to time, branch tracks or sidings from the lines of railroad authorized by this act into any lot or lots adjacent to any street or avenue along which said lines of railroad are located, upon the application of the owner or owners of such lot or lots, to enable such owners to use their property for the purposes of coal, wood, or lumber yards, manufactories, warehouses, and other business enterprises: Provided, however, That no grade crossing of any street or avenue within the city of Washington shall be thereby created, but such connecting tracks shall be carried across such street or avenue in such manner as not to obstruct the free use thereof, and the plans of such connecting tracks shall in every case be first filed with and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That as to square southeast of square 267 and square 270 the Southern Railway Company (a railroad corporation of the State of Virginia, whose trains now move and are expected to continue to move to and from Washington over the tracks of the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and Washington Southern Railroad Company under agreements existing or hereafter to be made with the last-named companies granting the necessary right therefor) shall have the same rights of acquisition by purchase or condemnation, to be exercised under the same conditions, as are in this act provided for the acquisition of additional land by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company; and such squares when so acquired may be used by said Southern Railroad Company to accommodate the handling and delivery of local freight traffic in the District of Columbia.

LONG BRIDGE.

SEC. 11. That inasmuch as the present Long Bridge over the Potomac River is inadequate for the accommodation of the largely increased railroad and vehicular traffic, is in a measure obstructive of navigation, and needs to be reconstructed, the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is hereby directed and required to remove the present Long Bridge across the Potomac River, and, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, to build on practically the same line a new bridge in lieu thereof, said new bridge to be for railroad purposes only and to be adapted for two or more railway tracks, the Long Bridge to be removed and the new bridge constructed within four years from the date of the passage of this act. The said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove the Long Bridge and shall build, maintain, and keep in repair said new bridge at its own cost and expense, and shall maintain an efficient draw in said new bridge, operating the same so as not to unnecessarily impede the free navigation of the Potomac River at any hour of the day or night, and shall give other railroad companies the right to pass over said bridge upon such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon between the companies or prescribed by Congress.

PASSENGER BRIDGE.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into a contract with the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company or any other party to construct within two years after the passage of this act, at a point not less than 500 feet above the site of the present Long Bridge, a new and substantial bridge for highway travel, of iron or steel, resting upon masonry piers and provided with suitable approaches, and with a sufficient draw, all in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of War; and there is hereby appropriated (one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated) the sum of $568,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid from time to time, as the construction of the said bridge progresses, by the Secretary of War, under such regulations as he shall prescribe.

The said bridge shall be for highway traffic, and all street railroads chartered or that may hereafter be chartered by Congress shall have the right to cross said bridge on such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon between the companies or prescribed by Congress: Provided, That the street railroad now using the Long Bridge shall be permitted to change its location so as to cross the highway bridge herein provided for; all plans for such change to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army: And provided further, That a standard underground electric system of street car propulsion shall be installed by said company on the park highway leading to said bridge, and that the cost of asphalt paving between the tracks and two feet outside thereof shall be paid by said company. Each street railway company using said bridge shall pay, in addition to other taxes as by its charter provided, one-half of 1 cent for each and every passenger carried across said bridge.

PLANS TO BE SUBMITTED TO DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 13. That before any portion of the work herein described shall be authorized plans and profiles of the entire work, except such as relate to the new bridges authorized by sections 11 and 12, in accordance with the provisions herein contained, shall be prepared by the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and shall be submitted for approval to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Duly authenticated copies of said plans and profiles shall, after approval, be filed with the Commissioners aforesaid, and all work shall be done in accordance with them and shall be completed within five years from the date of the passage of this act. The company shall also deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia such sums of money as the Commissioners of said District may reasonably require to cover the cost of District inspection.

TAXATION.

SEC. 14. That the property occupied by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company under authority of this act, together with the improvements which may be put thereon, shall be subject to tax by the District of Columbia the same as other property in the District of Columbia: Provided, That no assessment, valuation, or tax shall be made, laid, or levied on the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company on account of any bridges, tunnels, elevated tracks, or subway which shall be located, constructed, or maintained under the authority of this act, and forming part of said railroad, in excess of that which would or could be lawfully made, laid, or levied if said railroad was wholly located and constructed on the surface of the ground; it being the true intent and meaning hereof that any such bridges, tunnels, elevated tracks, or subway forming a part of said railroad shall be assessed and valued for purposes of taxation and taxed on the same basis as any other equal portion of railroad situated within the said District of Columbia not constructed on, in, through, or upon any such bridges, tunnels, elevated tracks, or subway.

RIGHTS OF SUCCESSION.

SEC. 15. That all the provisions of this act, including all rights, powers, and privileges granted to, or duties imposed upon, said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, shall accrue to and devolve upon its successors and assigns; and in case the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, its capital stock, properties, corporate rights, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises, shall be merged into or consolidated with the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, or any other railroad corporation, to which the assent of Congress is hereby given, then and in that event the company which shall, by such merger or consolidation, so acquire the same shall be invested with and possessed of all the rights, powers, property, and privileges of said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company within the District of Columbia, as well those granted by this act as those heretofore existing, and shall have and exercise all the necessary rights, powers, and franchises respecting the same as fully as they would have been possessed and exercisable by said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company.

REPEAL OF CONFLICTING ACTS.

SEC. 16. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed.

RESERVED RIGHTS OF CONGRESS.

SEC. 17. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. BABCOCK (before the reading of the bill was concluded). Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, and for the convenience of the House, I ask unanimous consent that after this reading of the bill the further reading be dispensed with, and that the bill be open for amendment in any section.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I stated this morning to the chairman of our committee [Mr. BABCOCK] that the course which he now suggests would, I thought, be perfectly proper and that I would have no objection to it. But I have since suggested the proposition to several gentlemen, and they have stated that they want to offer amendments to different parts of the bill and they prefer it should be read by sections in the regular way.

Mr. BABCOCK. My motion will permit gentlemen to offer amendments to any part of the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. But if the bill be read by sections the amendments can be offered in regular order as the different sections are reached. I suggest to the gentleman that we might dispense with the further first reading and after the general debate take up the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman, as I understand, objects to my motion. I move, then, that the further reading of the bill as now in progress be dispensed with.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Eighth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Eleventh."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "for," insert the words "not less than," and after the word "two" insert the words "nor more than four."

Page 5, line 18, after the word "the," at the end of the line, add the words "time fixed for the."

Page 9, line 8, insert the word "it" after the word "as" where it appears before the word "now."

Page 11, line 2, strike out the semicolon where it appears after the word "public" and insert the word "and."

Page 11, line 6, strike out the semicolon where it appears after the word "passageways" and insert in lieu thereof a period; also at the end of said line strike out the word "and."

Page 11, line 7, strike out the small letter "a" in the word "all" and insert a capital "A."

"Page 13, line 10, after the word "Columbia," strike out the period and add the following: "and the United States, as hereinbefore provided."

Page 13, line 19, after the word "Columbia," strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That in every case in which an assessment of the damages or an award shall have been returned by the appraisers, the company, upon paying into court the amount so assessed or awarded, may enter upon and take possession of the land and property covered thereby irrespective of whether exceptions to said assessment or award shall be filed or not, and the subsequent proceedings shall not interfere with or affect such possession, but shall only affect the amount of the compensation to be paid."

Page 14, line 18, after the word "therefor" and the parenthesis, add the words "and its successors."

Page 14, line 23, strike out the word "Railroad" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Railway."

Page 14, line 24, after the word "Company," add the words "and its successors."

Page 14, line 25, after the word "traffic," add the following: "and for its other corporate purposes."

Page 16, line 2, after the word "Company," add the words "or any other party."

Page 16, lines 20 and 21, strike out the word "reasonable," in line 20, and also the following: "agreed upon between the companies or."

Page 17, line 4, after the word "bridge," insert the following: "and no dynamo furnishing power to this portion of the road shall be in any manner connected with the ground."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a large map of these proposed changes has been prepared for the information of the House. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia may be permitted to come upon the floor and explain the engineering features of this plan. In order that this request may be acted on by the House, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration Senate bill 1929, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there has been prepared for the use and information of the House a large map showing the changes which this bill contemplates—the property which will be vacated by the railroad company and the property which will be occupied by the company. That map is here in the corridor, and I desire to ask the unanimous consent that Captain Beach, the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, may be permitted to come upon the floor and answer any questions that any member may desire to ask in reference to the engineering features of this proposition. This course, I will say, is usual in the Senate. I believe that on this same bill information was furnished to the Senate in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read Rule XXXIV of the House, on the question of admission to the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, viz: The President and Vice-President of the United States and their private secretaries, judges of the Supreme Court, members of Congress and members elect, contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House, the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, heads of Departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Architect of the Capitol, the Librarian of Congress and his assistant in charge of the Law Library, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-members of the House of Representatives who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress, and clerks of committees when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule or to present from the chair the request of any member for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. This rule, it seems to the Chair, is explicit; and it meets completely the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin. This is not the United States Senate, but the House of Representatives, acting under its own rules. Under the specific rule just read, the Chair is not permitted to entertain the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 12904) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902; which was read the first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve all points of order upon this bill.

ELEVATED RAILROAD TRACKS, WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to further consider the bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill S. 1929.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I regret exceedingly that the gentleman who reported this bill from the District Committee is indisposed to-day, and unexpectedly it becomes my duty to present the matter to the House. There is a map which I will ask to have placed in the area, so that members can examine it at their leisure.

The map now before you is intended to show the changes of the line, and also the property vacated by the railway company and the lands that are turned over to the railway company to carry out the proposed plan of elevation of the tracks.

The estimated cost of this improvement on the part of the Pennsylvania line, or the Baltimore and Potomac line, reaches the sum of nearly $6,000,000. Under this bill the contribution that is made by the Government and the District of Columbia is practically all in real estate. I am told by prominent engineers, gentlemen of long experience in their profession, that from an engineering standpoint this is an ideal plan, one in which they say there must be acquiescence generally and one which will be very difficult to improve upon.

This proposition, I may say, has been before Congress for many years. It was before the committee when I had the honor of becoming a member of this body, seven years since.

This particular bill now before us has been under consideration by the engineers and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Government authorities for four years. It embodies, as I have stated, what is termed an ideal plan from an engineering standpoint. The cost, in the opinion of the District Commissioners and the committee of the House, as well as of the Senate District Committee, and which has been examined into very carefully, should be divided equitably, and it has been suggested that for the elevation proper, that is, the expense incurred in elevating the tracks, the District of Columbia and the General Government should contribute one-half of the total amount, the other expenses to be paid by the railway company itself.

This, gentlemen of the committee, is the Commissioners' bill, which has been worked out by the District engineers in connection with the engineers of the Pennsylvania Company, and is presented here by the consent of the railroad company after four years of negotiation, investigation, and examination.

Now, I apprehend that there can be but little discussion as to the general plan proposed. Members may differ as to the amount of the contribution to be made by the Government to the railroad companies, respectively, in the proposed improvements. But I want to say that not only this bill, but the bill elevating the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company I believe present features of unusual interest and importance, and will result in making the grandest and most convenient terminals enjoyed by any city in the world. Of course, in doing this work and making the changes, it necessarily requires the use of grounds and streets, and results in criticism to a certain extent from some quarters. But as a rule the people of the District of Columbia are behind the proposition. I would say that ninety-nine out of one hundred favor it; that the people and taxpayers of the District unite in the consensus of opinion as to the desirability of this project, as agreed upon by the District Commissioners, the railway company, the Senate of the United States, and your House committee, after long investigation, and we present this bill, gentlemen, with its many details, for your approval to-day.

I wish to say frankly that it has been practically impossible for any member of the District Committee to familiarize himself with all of the details of the measure. When you stop to consider that this is a plan which has required the study of four years on the part of men who have given their entire time to it, you will realize the difficulty that we have had in going over all of its details, examining the reports of the committees and various engineers to which they have given so much time. I believe that this measure, if enacted into law, will meet the requirements of the city for a century to come; and while these differences to which I have alluded may come up between the railroad company and the general public as to what each should contribute in the matter, I think the project is so vast and desirable that all small matters can be readily overlooked in attaining the general results so desirable.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman state, in acres, how much land within the limits of the city is transferred to the railroad company in this connection?

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will examine the committee report, he will find all of its details given in exact terms as to what the bill covers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then let me ask if you are familiar with any case in which any American city has made a contribution like this toward expenditures necessary to protect the terminals of a railroad company?

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On December 11, 1900:

H. R. 4400. An act for the relief of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district of Missouri.

On December 18, 1900:

H. J. Res. 281. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of said month.

GRADE CROSSINGS, ETC., BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners reported upon that subject, and I believe contributions have been made in every city, practically, where elevations have been made, perhaps with the exception of Chicago.

Mr. GAINES. Now will my friend yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. You spoke of some people objecting to this. Will you please state what the grounds of their objections were?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes. The principal objection that has been raised to this bill is that it takes quite a considerable portion of what is known as the Mall, where the Pennsylvania depot is now located. In order to give the company more room to build its proposed new station for the accommodation of the traveling public this is necessary. It also takes some land to widen B street in front of the station.

Mr. GAINES. It takes whose land?

Mr. BABCOCK. The land in the Mall.

Mr. GAINES. Belonging to whom?

Mr. BABCOCK. Belonging to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GAINES. It takes public property?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. Your proposition is for the Government to cede to the railroad company land upon which to make these improvements?

Mr. BABCOCK. In this particular instance, yes.

Mr. GAINES. How much ground?

Mr. BABCOCK. The station now occupies a portion of the Mall. The station will be built upon the ground where it now stands; but it will be larger and cover considerably more ground.

Mr. GAINES. I think there ought to be a better depot there. I am trying to get some information.

Mr. BABCOCK. The proposition is to expend a million and a half of dollars in building the station.

Mr. GAINES. Who is to spend it?

Mr. BABCOCK. The railroad company.

Mr. GAINES. How much is this land worth?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the Commissioners estimated it at $2.50 a square foot.

Mr. GAINES. What do you think it is worth? You know something about land.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, my opinion would not be of much value.

Mr. GAINES. Do you think that is a reasonable price for it?

Mr. BABCOCK. I have heard no criticism upon the amount fixed, except by the railroad company. They say it is not worth it.

Mr. GAINES. Does the committee make any report specifically on that?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; not specifically on that.

Mr. GAINES. Is the report of the committee unanimously in favor of the proposition?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; there is a minority report.

Mr. GAINES. Has that been read?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not.

Mr. COWHERD. I am going to explain that now.

Mr. BABCOCK. The reports have not been read.

Mr. GAINES. I thank the gentleman. I am just trying to get some information.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question?

Mr. COWHERD. I hope this will not come out of my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. If gentlemen will turn to page 22 of the report, they will see a statement of the amount of ground proposed to be taken—about 34½ acres all told.

Mr. GAINES. Do you mean to say that you want that much ceded to the railroad by the Government—34 acres?

Mr. BABCOCK. About 34 acres; yes.

Mr. GAINES. What is the Government doing with this property now?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, it is practically all vacant property. A portion of it is one side of Garfield Park. There is a strip off the Mall and a portion down farther.

Mr. HULL. A large part of this is now used by the railroad company, is it not?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. I notice on page 17 of the bill that the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railroad Company is required to use the highway bridge. That seems to be an amendment by the House committee. I want to know the reason for that. Would it not be as well to leave that matter where the Senate left it, to be agreed on between the railroad company and the Mount Vernon Railroad Company?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Senate provision left this bridge open to all street railway companies that wanted to cross, and took the control entirely away from Congress. For that reason it was amended, intending to preserve the right of this road, which now crosses the bridge, but not to give a general omnibus right to every road which might want to cross.

Mr. RIXEY. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this amendment requires the Mount Vernon road to use the highway bridge. Now, this Mount Vernon road is more like an ordinary railroad through the country than it is a street railway. It does not stop at street corners for passengers. It has regular depots, a regular corps of telegraphers, and is run by telegraphic order. It seems to me that ought to be left subject to agreement with the railroad companies.

Mr. BABCOCK. Your idea would be to strike out the word "required?"

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not see any objection to that. It was not the intention of the committee.

Mr. RIXEY. Then I expect I can prepare an amendment for it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes. You had better strike out the words "and required."

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I would like to know what provision is made about the damages to property. I have just received a letter from some property owners in Eckington.

Mr. DALZELL. That is another road.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is not in this bill. I reserve my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in consideration of this proposition, a proposition that appropriates more than two and a half million dollars of the people's property, and calls for an appropriation of $568,000 additional in money, that it ought to have the careful attention of the House. Now, the chairman says that it is customary for cities to aid railroads in the question of elevating tracks. I do not want to go into that proposition at this time, but I want to submit to the House that in every case where any city has assisted a railroad in the matter of elevation, the equities have been considered, unless there was a specific law apportioning the different parts that each was to pay.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, known in this bill as the Baltimore and Potomac, comes into the city of Washington over a bridge built by the Government, for which they never paid a single, solitary cent; they come into the city of Washington over streets dedicated to them by the Government, for which they have never paid a penny. Their terminal station is situated on a public reservation in the city of Washington, for which they have never paid a single dollar. Now, every man knows that in building a railroad the greatest item of cost is the cost of terminal stations, the acquiring of land in the great cities where the railroad is to end; and here is a great railroad, entering a great city, and it has never paid a single, solitary dollar for these, the three greatest items of expense that any railroad must pay when it enters Washington.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it not known to all members that the citizens of Washington at the time the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was built in here would have given them the right of way through Pennsylvania avenue if it was necessary to get them to build into the city?

Mr. COWHERD. That does not alter the facts I have stated at all, if it was true at the time that railroad was built in here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in considering this proposition, it seems to me there are two or three things that the House wants to consider. First, they want to know the necessity for the change; next, they want to know the cost of the change, and, next, they want to know whether the necessity is so great as to be equal to the amount of money and property that we are to give for it, and, lastly and most important, in my mind, they want to know whether this proposition involves certain rights of the Government that, to my mind at least, are far more even than the two and one-half millions of property we give away. In the first place, I want to call attention to the fact that the Pennsylvania Railroad as it comes into the city does not run over the best part of the city of Washington by any means. It is largely down along the river front, and largely along property that is of no very great value, that is now being used for coal yards and switches, and there is no great necessity for this change.

I submit it would be better, better for the company, better for the city, if the tracks are elevated, or at least the grade street crossings abolished; but I contend that there is not the necessity for it in regard to the Baltimore and Potomac that does exist with reference to the Baltimore and Ohio. The very gentleman who reported this bill, when a proposition providing that the Pennsylvania should have authority to build side tracks and switches in that part of the city and operate their lines through certain Government property was before the House about ten years ago, designated this part of the city as "Mud Hollow" and "Hell's Bottom." I do not propose to give it any such names, but no one will contend that it is in the most valuable or the best portion of the city.

Now, in addition to that, I want to call attention to the fact that the city of Washington is not a great commercial city, and I hope it will never be, and ought not to be. It is to be the capital of the nation, and if we are to make it a beautiful city, which it will be, it should not be a great manufacturing city, with the great business interests that are inimical to the building or maintainining of a beautiful city.

Now, I want to call attention to what the company gets. I will ask gentlemen to turn to the report of the majority in this case, on page 22, where they will find the report of Colonel Bingham to Gen. John M. Wilson, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds. I want to say that while the chairman of the committee suggests that the District Commissioners and the citizens are in favor of it, the officers in charge of the public property in the District of Columbia, the Secretary of War, through his subordinates, reports directly against the bridge proposition and against giving them any of the land on the Mall and at Garfield Park.

In the minority report we estimate the value of the property, including the apportionment of $568,000 for the bridge, at $2,212,500. Gentlemen will observe that it is something more than the estimate in the Senate report. The answer is this: The Baltimore and Potomac now occupies about 4 acres of the Mall, or 129,000 square feet, not included in the Senate estimate, although they do not own the property and never did. This bill, however, will give it to them, but they do not own it now.

Mr. RIXEY. Does the bill give it to them in fee simple?

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, it practically gives it to them forever. Gentlemen know that if they are permitted to go there and erect a two-million-dollar depot and tracks, no Congress hereafter will ever remove it, and therefore it practically gives it to them forever.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that while I estimate the cost to the Government at $2,212,000, I have not estimated the public lands taken by more than 8 acres of Government reservation. I did not do that because they are the small reservations that you will note marked along the map, and I knew nothing about the value of them. Now, then, I submit, in the first place, that the cost here is greater than the value of the work you will obtain after it is done. In order to get the tracks elevated and depressed, you are paying practically out of the people's money and property two and one-half million dollars. I submit that is more than the work will be worth to the Government after it is completed.

There is another proposition in this case that to my mind is more important than the question of giving away the people's property.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman from Missouri passes on to that question, I want to ask a question.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that in addition to giving the railroad company all this land, we pay every cent of the cost of elevating and depressing the tracks?

Mr. COWHERD. No; the gentleman is mistaken in regard to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Tell the committee how that is.

Mr. COWHERD. The railroad company pays for the cost of changing the tracks, but the Government and District pay the cost of conforming the streets to the tracks and carrying the ways over and under the track, and the cost of approaches.

Mr. GAINES. What is that estimated to cost?

Mr. COWHERD. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; but I personally have no doubt that that estimate is much too low, because I know there are several places where there will have to be long approaches built past property already improved; and while the Commissioners estimate the probable damages at $50,000, I can not see why the property owners will not be entitled to much larger damages; and the cost of bridges and approaches and street changes is estimated at $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. What is the assessed value taken by the improvement which the Government will have to pay for, or will have to be paid for by the city? I mean in the change of streets and grades.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not understand that any property will be taken that will have to be paid for by the city. The city will have to pay for the damages to property by reason of the change of grade, and will have to pay for conforming the streets to the tracks.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman makes an estimate leaving out the 8 acres. How much will the 8 acres be valued at?

Mr. COWHERD. I have no estimate for that, and therefore I make none.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The railroad company occupy this property now, do they not?

Mr. COWHERD. I want to call attention to that point by referring to the map. The gentleman from Connecticut has asked me whether the railroad company do not now occupy this property. They do not now occupy the property proposed to be given.

The railroad now comes into the tunnel here [illustrating]; comes up in this direction, cutting off a part, I think, of Garfield Park, and then runs through, as indicated, on the street line; then coming in at this point [illustrating] and coming through; then coming down Sixth street, crossing over into the reservation known as the Mall, and running up to the terminal station.

It is proposed that this tunnel shall be straightened and extended so that the railroad will come up on the line of Virginia avenue, and when it reaches Garfield Park shall come out of the tunnel just about that point. At its crossing of New Jersey avenue [indicating] the railroad will be about seven feet below the surface, and New Jersey avenue will be carried over on a bridge. When it reaches this avenue [indicating] the elevation will be about twenty feet, and the street will pass under. From that point the road goes on as an elevated structure about twenty feet high. All of Garfield Park lying to that side [illustrating] of the railroad is given to the company in this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the gentleman's statement is misleading. The portion of the park which he now points out is now occupied, as I understand, by the main line.

Mr. COWHERD. No; the main line comes up here [illustrating]. A portion of the park here is occupied, but none of this portion. The main line is changed to that point [illustrating]. As I understand, the railroad now occupies something over 5 acres of the park, and we propose to give them by this bill 12 acres.

A MEMBER. In addition?

Mr. COWHERD. No, 12 acres in all—6.20 acres in addition to that they now occupy.

As I have said before, the present occupation is temporary. The company has never paid a cent for it. It has never been given to them or appropriated to them. They have simply been permitted to run their tracks over it.

I say frankly I do not object to this bill on account of its giving the company a portion of Garfield Park. If this improvement could go through, with the station removed from the Mall, I would not object to giving that land in Garfield Park and would not object to giving the right of way along the streets. But I want to call attention to the fact that we practically give this company 14 acres out of the very heart of the Mall. Here are the tracks running down Sixth street [illustrating], and here is Seventh street. It is proposed to widen Seventh street. The remainder of the block extending from B street NW. to B street SE. is given to the company forever. Then they propose to erect a depot and over it run tracks, seventeen or eighteen in number, if I remember rightly.

I suggest to the House that to-day we are going out and buying grounds for public buildings and making public reservations. A few years ago we spent almost a million and a half of dollars to acquire property adjacent to Rock Creek for a public park. We spent I do not know how many millions to get land for the Public Library. A proposition is now being discussed in the papers to condemn all the property on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue to be used for buildings which the Government may need in the future. And now, while we are buying property for public use at great public expense, it is proposed that we give to this railroad company 14 acres of as good land as lies in the city of Washington. And in this way we propose to cut up and ruin forever the most magnificent reservation in this capital city. [Applause.]

When the gentleman talks here about wanting to put the railroad terminals in the best shape, such shape so as to beautify the city, I say the minority of the committee stand here to-day representing those who desire to make this a beautiful city in the interests not only of the District of Columbia, but of all the people of the United States. Every man in the United States has an interest in that magnificent reservation. It is marked off on the original plans of l'Enfant. It was reserved by Washington to be the best of all the city's system of parks. It lies in the center of the city; and I say to you here and now that if this city is to be made—as it should be made—the most beautiful capital under God's sun, you never can make it such if you give to this railroad company those 14 acres in the center of that park.

There lies for the landscape architect and the landscape gardener an opportunity which exists in no other city in the world; and it is proposed to-day to give away that opportunity in order that people traveling by this railroad may land a few feet nearer Pennsylvania avenue. That is all there is of it. You can give this company the right to condemn land on this reservation up here [illustrating] and you can give them the right to erect a station there [illustrating]. That will only be two minutes farther than the present location from Pennsylvania avenue for a person walking, and less than a minute for anyone riding in a cab or carriage.

Two street railway lines connect all of the important systems in the city; there is no difficulty in reaching any portion of the city from this location, and the slight inconvenience which would be occasioned by the change in the location of the new station would be absolutely infinitesimal. And yet, notwithstanding this fact, you propose to ruin that magnificent park, to ruin the plans which have been so long cherished for the future of this city, and locate the depot at this point simply because you claim it is a little bit more convenient for those people coming in or leaving the city. I object to it. We should not destroy that magnificent property.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of selling this property?

Mr. COWHERD. No, sir, I am not. I was endeavoring to show that I am not either in favor of selling or giving it away.

Mr. PEARRE. I thought your objection was to giving it away.

Mr. COWHERD. No; I object to either plan. I would prefer, as the founder of the city intended, to reserve these open places for the adornment of the city, for the purpose of making this the most beautiful capital on the face of the earth. And when you give away or sell this property, then you destroy the possibility of carrying out the great purposes which the eminent founder of the city had in view and which we all desire to see accomplished.

Mr. PEARRE. What is the present occupation of that portion of the Mall to which you refer?

Mr. COWHERD. Why the railroad company has a temporary right to occupy 5 or 6 acres of public ground there; and let me say to the gentleman from Maryland that when they got that it was with the right to lay only two tracks; and it was stated in the Senate that they only had a temporary right at that, with the privilege to lay only two tracks and intended to run no engines over it at all. Yet they have made a myriad of tracks and are running trains every hour of the day through there.

Mr. SIMS. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Would it not be better to make a direct appropriation of money equal to the whole amount carried by the bill—that is, equal to the value of the 14 acres proposed to be donated—if necessary to do so and to accomplish justice to the railroad company, rather than to give up this property?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, for myself, I would rather give outright the $2,000,000 than to accomplish the destruction of this park in this manner, but I am not in favor of doing either.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment prepared, which I shall offer at the proper time, giving the railroad company all the rights granted in this bill, except that this reservation shall be untouched, and requiring them to remove the tracks from Sixth street and locate the depot between B and D streets and between Sixth and Tenth streets, as they may find most convenient, with the right to use such reservations as lie between these points. This will give them all the rights that could possibly be required. They can construct their depot then at this point on the map [indicating] in place of the one suggested, and there will be no inconvenience to the people coming in or leaving the city as compared with the location proposed here.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is the location of the depot which the gentleman proposes the same as that proposed upon the plan now before us as prepared by the landscape architect?

Mr. COWHERD. I was just coming to that.

Mr. GROUT. In that connection I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. If the depot is located where the gentleman indicates on the map, would it require to be elevated in order to accommodate itself to the tracks?

Mr. COWHERD. It would require to be elevated, of course, if the tracks were elevated.

Mr. BABCOCK. If you get rid of Dead Man's Curve you must elevate the tracks.

Mr. COWHERD. That, as I understand it, will be done by a tunnel.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then the tracks must be elevated at the point the gentleman indicates.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly, and the depot would have to be elevated to accommodate the elevated tracks.

Now, in one of the last appropriation bills passed a year ago $4,000 was appropriated under instructions to the Secretary of War to employ the services of a landscape architect to investigate and report upon a plan for the permanent improvement of the Mall. Those plans have been drawn by Mr. Parsons. They are shown here on the large map, the Capitol grounds, the Monument, and the White House being shown, as gentlemen can plainly see. The plans attempt to show what is eventually intended to be a connection with Rock Creek Park.

I do not commit myself, and I do not ask or attempt in any way to commit the House, to any approval of those plans, but I offer them, showing what magnificent improvements can be made upon that public reservation, if you will keep the railroad company off.

I want to call attention to the fact that the landscape architect who has presented these plans has located the depot out here on the south side, and he states specifically in his report that the depot located in the heart of the Mall and the tracks running across it will forever prevent any proper permanent improvement of the Mall. Why, gentlemen, it is intended here that the depot shall be a solid structure, with some eighteen or twenty tracks, running clear across the park, and that the only way under it will be by arches—the bill states not less than 200 feet of space—by an arch or arches. And the plans of the District Commissioners provide only for the carrying of South Capitol street through under an arch of 50 feet.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman point out where the depot will be located?

Mr. DINSMORE. Where the depot will be located according to the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. According to the bill, the property given to the railroad company would be this which I point out on the map. This is Seventh street, and Sixth street, as you see, would run through here, and the bill would take out all that part of the property and give it to the railroad company for their terminal station.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That would make impossible a direct connection between the Capitol and the Monument.

Mr. COWHERD. It would make impossible any kind of connection, except by an archway underneath these tracks, and it would cut off any hope of ever treating that public reservation as a whole.

Mr. DINSMORE. It would deface that part of it forever.

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. Does the depot, under the Parsons plan, take any portion of the park except the building indicated down here?

Mr. COWHERD (referring to the map). This is the building indicated here. The Parsons plan provides for taking some additional property that is not in the reservation as it now stands. The depot as it is shown on the Parsons plan will be located just about here [indicating].

Mr. GROUT. But it would take none of the present Mall.

Mr. COWHERD. It would take none of the present Mall, as I understand it.

Mr. BABCOCK. It shows in that plan that they have taken a portion of it.

Mr. COWHERD. This is Maryland avenue. Gentlemen will notice that Maryland avenue runs south of the present Mall.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I stated at the outset, I do not wish in any way to insist that the House should express any approval or disapproval of the plans. It may be that this is too expensive a plan. It may be that it takes too much property. But I do submit that we want to see this city made a beautiful city, and if we do, the distinctive feature of the future in the treatment of the nation's capital will be the treatment of this magnificent reservation.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Does this plan simply take property that is now public property?

Mr. COWHERD. It does not.

Mr. DALZELL. Does it contemplate the condemning of private property?

Mr. COWHERD. It contemplates the condemning of property up to Pennsylvania avenue, and down to Maryland avenue on the other side.

Mr. DALZELL. Taking private property on both sides of what is now public property.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the anticipated cost?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know, but it will be quite large.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It does not take private property on both sides, does it?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; on both sides.

Mr. COWHERD. On both sides.

Mr. DALZELL. Can you give us an idea of what the cost would be?

Mr. COWHERD. I can say this: I have read in a newspaper that there has been a rough estimate by Mr. Parsons that, including the extension out to Rock Creek, it might run up as high as seven and a half million dollars. That is what I suppose the gentleman wants. That includes the condemnation of large portions of property, as you will see, reaching toward Pennsylvania avenue on the north and toward Maryland avenue on the south, and the extension out to Rock Creek Park. But permit me to say that even if you do not condemn that property, if you make no effort to acquire that property, which means a large part of this expense, if you keep this railroad off the Mall, you will still have the right to treat that reservation as a whole, and have here in the city of Washington and in the heart of the city the most beautiful park in the world at a comparatively small cost.

Mr. GAINES. Was not that approved by Washington?

Mr. COWHERD. Washington was one of the commissioners to lay off the city, and approved the plan of l'Enfant.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman state whether that space is entirely uncut now?

Mr. COWHERD. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I want to call attention to that part of this proposed plan, so as to see what is done in that respect. Of course the space known as the Mall is cut by streets.

If this proposed plan is adopted, it is intended to consolidate the traffic into four streets—Four-and-a-half, Seventh, Twelfth, and Fourteenth streets. It is intended that the street cars and the heavy traffic should go down these streets, the road of which will be slightly depressed, and the pleasure traffic will follow these curved driveways and the boulevard will go over bridges spanning the road, either going this way or coming from that way, so that the traffic streets will run through, but the heavy traffic that will run thereon will in no way injure the park or destroy the great opportunities of this reservation.

I would like to call some attention to the particular features of this bill. We are called on to give away two and a half million dollars for the purpose of eliminating grade crossings. We abandon fifteen streets in order to eliminate grade crossings on twenty-two streets. That is exactly what is done in this bill. If gentlemen will turn to page 13, they will find a list of the streets that will be actually closed and abandoned, and some small ones that are not included.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman state whether these streets that are to be abandoned have been improved?

Mr. COWHERD. We learn from the report of the Commissioners of the District that wherever the railroad owns the street it is of no importance at all that the street should be abandoned. Wherever they do not own it they go to an enormous expense in order to carry the street over it. You will find in the report of the Commissioners certain squares owned by the railroad company, and that where these streets touch on these squares we abandon and vacate them.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What I wanted to know is, whether these streets that are to be abandoned have been improved, and are they now in such a condition that they can be traveled?

Mr. COWHERD. A portion of them have been paved, I understand.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it not a fact that wherever the street is vacated the Commissioners have required the railroad company to purchase and own the abutting property?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; where the street is vacated; but if it is necessary to go to the expense of two and a half millions of dollars to eliminate about half of the grade crossings, why should it not be cheaper for the railroad to own all the abutting property? We could buy the abutting property clear along the line and abandon all these streets for that money. I do not understand that because the railroad owns the abutting property on each side that the passage to the property beyond would not be hindered and obstructed by vacating the streets.

I want to call attention to the fact respecting streets wherein the grade crossings are eliminated. As I said, 15 streets are to be abandoned and 22 grade crossings eliminated. Of these 22, 10 are eliminated by carrying the streets over the railroad, and 5 of that 10 by elevated bridges that will require a considerable approach to be built. That means a great inconvenience to the traveling public and means a great cost to the people. Now, of the 12 where grade crossings are eliminated by elevation of the track, in 5 of these cases we have to lower the street for the tracks to be sufficiently elevated to eliminate the grade crossing, and this means cutting down the streets from 1½ feet in the lowest to 10.65 feet in the largest change.

So I again assert that while this may be an ideal proposition from an engineering standpoint, as the chairman has stated, it is not an ideal plan from the standpoint of the Government, from the standpoint of the citizen owning property along this right of way, or from the standpoint of the condition in which the Government reservations are to be left.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Referring to this plan, as I understand, the present station is on the corner of Sixth street?

Mr. COWHERD. On the corner of Sixth and B.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It would have just about this location, between Sixth and Seventh streets [indicating]?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, the plan of Mr. Parsons proposes the acquisition by the Government to the line of Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And the construction of a number of handsome public buildings along that line?

Mr. COWHERD. And that all further intended public buildings should be constructed along that line.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask if it would not be possible to provide that the railroad should purchase the property in front of B street, between B street and Pennsylvania avenue, and put a station there and thus carry out this plan, the station being one of the public buildings contemplated by this plan; whether or not the tracks running up there could not be depressed or run in a tunnel in such a way as not to interfere with the general beauty of the park?

Mr. COWHERD. Unquestionably it could not under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not mean under the provisions of this bill. I ask whether or not that plan is not practicable?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know whether it is practicable or not. I have heard some objection to a tunnel along the line of the road, because it is said that the land is so low that it would be full of water. But if it were practicable, the tunnel would have to begin way back. If the road came in in a tunnel all the way it could go through under the park and come out at its station, as you suggest.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does not the plan propose to elevate the tracks?

Mr. COWHERD. Elevate the tracks and elevate the station, and run clear across the Mall.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the elevation?

Mr. COWHERD. I think about 20 feet.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want a few moments to answer some of the propositions made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. I think I can show, Mr. Chairman, that his argument in reference to the Mall and the land taken there falls to the ground when properly understood. I will endeavor to explain that situation now. The black lines on this map represent the present tracks. They are to be abandoned. The red lines are the ones that will be maintained. Now, if the committee will notice, the railroad company has the whole of Sixth street. This will be given back to the public and opened clear through under the track; and I submit, gentlemen of the committee, that there is nearly as many feet of ground in Sixth street from this point here up to Missouri avenue as is taken out of the Mall by this plan. The green on the plan shows the streets, and this part here shows the portion that is taken under the proposed bill. Here are the tracks on the Mall, and the street is widened down the full width and dropped back some 40 or 50 feet for the greater convenience of the public.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. While it is true that all that land is taken there by the railroad and used now, it is only a temporary occupation. It need not necessarily be permanent?

Mr. BABCOCK. None of the land is given in fee simple by this bill. Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal.

Mr. COWHERD. When this great improvement shall have been made, does not the gentleman deem it to be permanent to the extent that no Congress could ever, or would ever, remove it?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the gentleman from Missouri is correct. I think the occupancy there is practically permanent now. I think it would be extremely difficult to oust the Pennsylvania road from the property they have at present in the city.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Was not it expressly understood when the ground was given to the road that it was a temporary occupation?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not familiar with that subject.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Of course.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman: As I understand it, the land now occupied by the railroad across the Mall is occupied by what amounts to a license not given in fee?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand it so.

Mr. CANNON. I understand, not from reading the bill, but it is what I want to find out, that it is proposed by the grant contained in this bill to give a license and not give it in fee?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not in fee.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman has said now that, from a practical standpoint of the interests of the public and the interests of the road and the interests of the District, he is satisfied that it is practically impossible to move the railroad with its depot from the location it has now?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners say it is absolutely impracticable, and the committee believed it to be so.

Mr. WHEELER. Why?

Mr. CANNON. For the same reason that it would be impracticable if the larger grant was made, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has already explained.

Mr. WHEELER. Under this easement they have practically a fee simple title, have they not?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. DINSMORE. What would be the objection to removing the station farther back, so that it would not encroach upon the Mall?

Mr. BABCOCK. In the first place, there is no citizen of the District of Columbia who would not protest against the station being put back nearly half a mile, or certainly a quarter of a mile—back here on the other side of the Mall.

Mr. DINSMORE. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] to say that it would not be more than a thousand feet.

Mr. BABCOCK. It would be much more than a thousand feet if placed back of the Mall.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the station were moved back a thousand feet, as the gentleman from Missouri has suggested, would not the Seventh street line of railway and the other line run very near this station? The Seventh street line would run right under the shadow of the station.

Mr. BABCOCK. Two car lines already cross the Mall—one on Seventh street and one on Four-and-a-half; and whatever may be done about this improvement, I do not think it is intended to dispossess or take up the street-car lines which now cross the Mall.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would not those street-car lines accommodate all the people who may be going to and from that depot?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes. In the same way it may be said that they would be accommodated if they were obliged to go down to the oyster wharves in order to take the train for Chicago or New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman from Wisconsin believe that the people of the United States who own all this territory are more interested in a magnificent park system in this magnificent capital than in the convenience of a few persons who may be benefited by placing the railroad station adjoining Pennsylvania avenue? And is not that a consideration which ought to appeal to members of the House?

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe the adoption of this proposition will be a greater step toward the improvement and beautifying of Washington than anything that has been done in that line.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that the officer who has charge of the public grounds and parks of the city of Washington is opposed to this plan and condemns it? I refer to Mr. Bingham.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is very true; and Mr. Bingham condemns any proposition that touches any public property in the city of Washington, whether the proposition is to take such property for a public building or for anything else.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the land proposed to be taken is practically in disuse now.

Mr. GAINES. Why so? Can we not make it into a park?

Mr. BABCOCK. The greater part of it is now occupied by the railroad. The portion between Sixth and Seventh streets is practically of no use.

Mr. GAINES. Why so?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Is it not true that Congress is just waking up to the fact that Washington ought to have a magnificent park system? Practically nothing has been done heretofore, in my judgment, toward beautifying this city. The city of Boston, within the last few years, has spent $25,000,000 in beautifying its park system, and yet when it is proposed to spend $5,000,000 for a similar purpose in this city, the outcry is raised that we may be impoverished.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman from Wisconsin has said, as I understand, that the railroad now occupying the Mall is a mere temporary affair.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; not a mere temporary affair.

Mr. GAINES. The license presupposes that it is temporary.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress is left free to take any action in the matter that it may see fit.

Mr. GAINES. The title is not in the railroad company, but still in the Government, so that the railroad is operated under a mere license. I want to ask the gentleman why he disagrees with the gentleman from Missouri and denies that this measure will destroy the park?

Mr. BABCOCK. Because the greater portion of the park—that between Sixth and Seventh streets—is already occupied. The park is now cut into by railroad tracks.

Mr. GAINES. Which can be removed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, certainly; you can drive those railroads entirely out of the city.

Mr. GAINES. Nobody wants to do that.

Mr. LENTZ. Does this railroad company pay any rental for this land?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to know where this license which has been spoken of is to be found.

Mr. BABCOCK. It is in an old act passed years ago.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to have the gentleman refer me to that act, so that we may examine it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not able on the moment to do so. The gentleman will find it in the statutes affecting the District of Columbia.

Now, I want to call attention again to the fact that this great subway, leading directly from the Capitol, will pass right under this depot by a 200-foot arch—wider than any street we have in this city. I call attention also to the fact that this improvement does not take away in a single particle any advantages that the citizens here are now enjoying. Why? Because the streets I have named are now occupied by those two railroads. If you undertake to accomplish what the gentleman from Missouri desires, without this proposition for elevation, you must go to work and take up all those tracks.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that, on the whole, the plan suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, if carried out, would be very much more expensive than the one recommended by the committee, costing 50 per cent or two and a half million dollars more and accomplishing not such good results.

And now a word as to the general plan the committee does propose. I wish to call the attention of the members present to the line as indicated on this map. The Southern lines coming in here across the Long Bridge follow up this line which is indicated on the map in red, and the lines coming in from the east—from Baltimore—follow this other line, both converging at the point indicated here on the map, both of them meeting at the Y, at the point which I now indicate to you, and then going parallel down into the heart of the city to the station.

Now, as I understand it, the former Engineer Commissioner, Captain Black, now a colonel in Habana, was the prime mover in this new plan. He gave to it an immense amount of time, thought, and study, and I believe he has left a record behind of which he is, and has reason to be, proud, and considers this the greatest engineering work of his life. If the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] carries the benefits that he attempted to show here, upon this other map—I hardly know what it is—it may be worth considering whether or not you might not better take away, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] suggested, all of this privilege to the road, and deny them the right of coming across there at all. But you must remember that the people of the city and of the country who are interested in this matter have also some rights which must be considered.

Mr. GAINES. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not suggest the taking away of the rights of the railroad.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand that.

Mr. GAINES. On the contrary, I said no; not to take them away. But as I understood the gentleman to say that they merely had a license, I only suggested that in that event it was not a permanent matter. I should, of course, be very sorry to have them leave the city.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand that. I did not mean to say that the gentleman had contemplated such a thing. I merely followed indirectly a suggestion of his to show the point I was making.

But in order to elevate this track for the purpose of making the improvements which have been suggested by the gentleman from Missouri you inflict damage here far beyond the present conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do you not think the city should be improved at the point you are indicating?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, Mr. Chairman, everything ought to be improved that can be improved; but I was simply calling attention to the enormous expense which would be involved in the plan suggested by my friend from Missouri, and how inadequate it would be to accomplish the good we believe can be accomplished by the committee's bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I wish to ask the gentleman if the character of the work required to be done where the track is to be elevated is specified? Is it to be an ornamental or a plain stone work?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is to be a permanent work, and the character is specified.

Mr. MANN. What I wish to ask is whether it is to be an ornamental structure, æsthetic in design, or whether it is to be a mere plain viaduct?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am glad the gentleman has suggested the interrogatory. The plans for the elevation of the tracks of both the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio, recommended here, are on file in the offices of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and are approved by the Commissioners and by the engineers of the road, and show an ornamental character of the work that could not be objected to by anyone.

Mr. MANN. Because, of course, as the gentleman knows, works of this character may be made æsthetic; and the structure to be put there under the operation of this clause should be artistic in character and pleasing to the public eye and not injurious in appearance to that park.

Mr. BABCOCK. That has already been worked out in detail, and the plans already made are a part of the legislation recommended.

Mr. MANN. So that the companies would be required to comply with certain plans, as to the appearance of this work, which have already been considered?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not only under certain plans, but the work is all under the control of the Commissioners, and must be made satisfactory to them.

Mr. MANN. I mean with a view to beautifying the park.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. For instance, if the gentleman will permit me, in the city of Chicago, where the Illinois Central Railroad elevated its tracks across the Midway at the time of the World's Fair, the elevation is made of such a character that in the opinion of nearly everybody it adds to instead of detracting from the beauty of the entire plan of the park.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Am I right in understanding that the main objection to moving the Pennsylvania depot out to the south of its present location is that it takes it a couple of thousand feet farther away from Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; that is not the principal objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That seems to be very trivial. What other objections are there?

Mr. BABCOCK. The difficulties of the whole engineering project are of such a character that it would practically end this elevating proposition for the present. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has stated that it would cost $7,500,000, according to the estimate of Mr. Parsons.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon, that does not state the fact correctly at all. Mr. Parsons's estimate includes a very great deal more than that.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I mean building the station there. Are there any engineering difficulties about that?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; but about the trackage.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It looks as though it would be easier to have the tracks come in straight than to come up on a Y.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin mean to say that it would be impossible to carry out this elevation scheme according to that plan?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, there is nothing impossible in engineering.

Mr. COWHERD. But does the gentleman say it would be impracticable?

Mr. BABCOCK. That it would be impracticable.

Mr. COWHERD. The engineers of the War Department say that it would not be.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin tell us why he considers it impossible?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not give the details. We simply have the report of the engineers and of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the committee must rely upon the reports of the officials for that.

Mr. THROPP. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. THROPP. Referring to the map here, I understand that you propose coming in a part of the distance through a tunnel. One of the objections to the proposition which has been made to tunnel the whole distance is that down on the low ground near the Potomac River they can not build a tunnel, for the reason when the Potomac is high it would be flooded. But you could keep the tracks on the surface, as they now are, could you not?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. THROPP. Now, could the company not overcome the principal objection which is being urged to the proposed plan of crossing the Mall with an elevated track by bringing their tracks up to the station on the surface, as they now are, and build retaining walls on the side, say 18 feet high, which I think the locomotives require, and then have an elliptic arch which would be sufficiently wide to cover the tracks, and grade up to and over this arch, making a mound-shaped elevation which would cover up the tracks, and which would not in the future interfere with the proposed plan for the park system which has been talked about? The Pennsylvania Railroad Company will certainly build a handsome station, as it has done in other cities, and I favor bringing it up to Pennsylvania avenue, if possible. Let its station be one of the proposed beautiful buildings on the south side of the avenue.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that is an entirely new idea.

Mr. THROPP. Has such a plan been brought to the attention of the committee and considered by them?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not by the committee; no.

Mr. THROPP. The reason for my suggesting this is that in depressing the tracks to the Reading terminal in Philadelphia, when they came to Fairmount Park they covered over the tracks in the way that I have suggested, leaving ventilating spaces, and have graded over the arches so that the effect is rather pleasing than otherwise. If that were done here it could be made just as beautiful as desired.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that I think that would be impossible over a portion of this route, and I do not think the gentleman's proposition would cure the objection that has been made.

Mr. THROPP. I think this city needs better terminal facilities for the railroads. The question is how to get them on the best and most attractive plan.

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee have not considered any proposition of the kind suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. FLEMING. If the gentleman will permit me, how many additional acres of the Mall are to be given under this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. I have not the figures right here at hand, and this map is not drawn to show exactly that; but, as I understand, the whole acreage will be about 14 acres.

Mr. FLEMING. What compensation are you getting from the railroad for that additional 14 acres?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is a part of the contribution on the 50 per cent basis of the cost of the elevation.

Mr. FLEMING. How much is the Government being allowed for that 14 acres?

Mr. BABCOCK. The value of the land is estimated by the Commissioners at two dollars and a half a square foot.

Mr. FLEMING. And your position, then, is that the Government is being paid for that property?

Mr. BABCOCK. The position is this: In the Pennsylvania elevation bill, the contribution on the part of the District, which is supposed to be about 50 per cent of the cost, is not cash, but in land. In the Baltimore and Ohio bill it is in money. The Pennsylvania gets its aid under this project in land, and under the project of the Baltimore and Ohio it gets its in money.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin think that 50 per cent sufficient for the railroad to pay?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, on this track elevation. The Government has nothing to do with the improvements, depots, and things of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does that 50 per cent mean of the whole cost? Does it include the land, too?

Mr. BABCOCK. Fifty per cent is what applies directly to the elevation, and not to the improvements or depots.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The 50 per cent of the amount would be paid by the Pennsylvania Railroad and 50 per cent by the Government for the elevation?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; 50 per cent of the cost of the elevation. That is the idea. That is the point that has been reached and recommended, after long investigation of the methods adopted in different cities of this country, by the Commissioners and by the Senate committee. The Commissioners report in favor of this plan.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Massachusetts requires the railroads to pay 65 per cent.

Mr. SHATTUC. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin who are asking for this legislation?

Mr. BABCOCK. The District Commissioners.

Mr. SHATTUC. And not the railroads?

Mr. COWHERD. I think it true that the Commissioners did not report favoring the location in the Mall. They called attention to the fact that they did not report as to whether it should be removed, but they left that to the discretion of Congress.

Mr. BABCOCK. In answer to that question, the Engineer Commissioner yesterday morning was asked the very question which you mention, and he stated to the committee absolutely that this is the only project, from an engineering standpoint, that would accomplish the result, and that he wanted to be regarded as absolutely in favor of that and against the proposition to move the depot down there.

Mr. COWHERD. I think the engineer had said he was in favor of it, but I want to say that the main reason, the moving reason, as I understood, why the Commissioners reported in favor of it was that they understood that Congress would not require them to move it out, and that they would leave it where they had it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand it, the plan proposed by Mr. Parsons provides for the acquisition of the block between Third and Fourth, between Fourth and Sixth, and Sixth and Seventh; that is, the streets between Third and Seventh streets on Pennsylvania avenue. Now I ask whether it is not possible to provide that the railroad should condemn the land in front up to Pennsylvania avenue, and the station house shall be constructed of such architectural design as will fit it into the general plan of having a stately, imposing line of buildings along the line of Pennsylvania avenue; and whether in that connection the tracks necessary to reach this station can not be depressed just as the street railroad tracks are proposed to be by the plan of Mr. Parsons along Seventh and Twelfth streets?

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that that has been my idea, and I made that suggestion to both the committee and the District Commissioners; and my idea is that it still would be better to have the depot fronting, as the gentleman suggests, on Pennsylvania avenue, and the street reached through this way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If that were done, would the tracks be depressed as the street railway tracks are, and so concealed by foliage, etc., as not to interfere with the general appearance of the park?

Mr. BABCOCK. That would be worse than elevation.

Mr. LACEY. How expensive would it be to condemn this block?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not know.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If this were done at this point here [indicating on map], could it not be done as I suggested in the question I asked you a moment ago?

Mr. BABCOCK. If this were made on the surface, it would be worse for the lower place than where elevated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that on Seventh street here, where the railroad tracks are really depressed below the general level, and where you will, under this plan, have roads running across bridges across the street from one portion of the Mall to another, that it would interfere with it?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is depressed at some points, altogether owing to the topography of the service, where it is necessary to get the necessary elevation.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SHATTUC. If this legislation is defeated, the railroad company will occupy the position that it does now?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I have had no opportunity to ask any questions of the chairman of the committee, and I would like to ask the chairman of the District Committee who has asked for this legislation?

Mr. BABCOCK. This is a plan worked out by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHATTUC. That does not answer my question. Are the railroad companies asking for it?

Mr. BABCOCK. The railroad companies have accepted it, but they have not asked for it.

Mr. SHATTUC. They did not ask for it?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir. I want to say that the committee has had this proposition for elevating the tracks before them since I first came to Congress.

Mr. SHATTUC. How long ago was that?

Mr. BABCOCK. Seven or eight years ago, and it was originally opposed by the railroad companies. One company said that if the bill was passed at that time it would put them into bankruptcy.

Mr. SHATTUC. Then, if we do not agree to this bill, the railroad companies will occupy the same space they now occupy?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly, if Congress does not interfere with them.

I want to say that where the land is vacated by the railroads under this bill it will enhance the value of the property there thousands of dollars.

Mr. SHATTUC. How long has it taken the engineers to work out and develop these plans?

Mr. BABCOCK. Four years.

Mr. SHATTUC. Well, I have not been able to get much new light on the subject within the last hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDGELY. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit me, I understand the elevation of the tracks for public safety and convenience will cost $2,500,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; where the estimated cost is two millions and a half it involves the building of a wagon bridge, which would be a permanent improvement. The old Long Bridge must be gotten rid of, as it is a menace to the city. The ice lodges against it in the spring, and gentlemen will remember that we have had to make appropriations every spring for a number of years to blow the ice out. It is absolutely necessary that the old Long Bridge should come out.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman state the amount it will cost to elevate the tracks at the grade crossings?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not understand.

Mr. RIDGELY. What will it cost to elevate the tracks as contemplated in the bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. The engineers have figured that it will actually cost $3,000,000 for the elevation of the property; that the cost of this improvement here will be $6,000,000, all told, and one-half of it is chargeable to elevation.

Mr. RIDGELY. About $3,000,000?

Mr. BABCOCK. Something over $3,000,000. I think $3,150,000 in the Baltimore and Ohio bill, and something over that in this bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. One-half of the cost of that is to be borne by the Government?

Mr. BABCOCK. One-half of the elevation proper to be borne by the Government.

Mr. RIDGELY. The question now is if the Government is to pay something like a million and a half in money, or in property, then will the Government have an interest in this property equal to the amount of money they have invested in it?

Mr. BABCOCK. The only interest the Government will have will be in the streets and the advantages that the general public will have from the elevation of the tracks and the general improvements. The Government will have no ownership of the property.

Mr. RIDGELY. The Government will not share in the ownership of the property?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] has the floor. Has he yielded it?

Mr. SHATTUC. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was there any testimony before the committee as to the number of deaths that had been caused by the grade crossings on this railroad?

Mr. BABCOCK. As to the number; no.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Any testimony as to the amount of damages that have been paid by the company on account of deaths?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was there no statement regarding it made by the railroad officials?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not before the House committee; no, sir. That matter was gone into at the other end of the Capitol. Before the House committee that portion of the road called "Dead Man's Curve" was referred to incidentally as being where the great loss of life had occurred on the Pennsylvania line, but to what extent I am unable to answer. Now, how much more time does the other side want?

Mr. COWHERD. Quite a number of gentlemen have requested time, and I think we had better let the matter run along for a while.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to reach some point of time when we can close the general debate.

Mr. COWHERD. Quite a number of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, as well as on the other side, have requested time. Now, I think in half an hour, or perhaps an hour, we can agree about it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Suppose we fix 3 o'clock as the time for closing debate?

Mr. COWHERD. I can not consent to that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that general debate on this bill be closed at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. SIMS. I am a member of the committee, and I have not yet had an opportunity to open my mouth on this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Of course the gentleman is entitled to recognition.

Mr. COWHERD. I make the point that we can not close general debate in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go over everything that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has said; but there are some matters connected with this bill that he has not discussed in detail and to which I wish to invite attention, because as a member of the committee I feel it my duty to give the members of the House all the information I have on this question.

This bill provides, among other things—and this is a point which has not been discussed—that there shall be a new bridge built by the railroad company where the Long Bridge now is. Of course, that bridge is to be for the benefit of the railroad, not for the benefit of the District of Columbia or the people of the United States. It is further provided that a new highway bridge shall be built instead of the highway bridge now used in connection with the railroad bridge. This highway bridge is to be built at a cost not exceeding $568,000, to be paid by appropriations by the Government of the United States.

Another thing should be stated in this connection. The present Long Bridge, as I understand, was built by the Government, and its use was given to the railroad company, which assumed the liability of keeping in repair the highway bridge, used by foot passengers, by vehicles, and by street cars. This bill proposes to relieve the railroad company entirely of that obligation by removing the highway bridge to another place, whereby the railroad company will be relieved from what is now a perpetual charge upon it—the maintenance of this highway bridge. This is a benefit which they are to receive under this bill, and it ought to be considered in connection with the other benefits they will receive.

The War Department is opposed to the building of two bridges so close together. The objection is that they will obstruct navigation. The proper officers of the Government, as shown in the majority report, object strongly to building two bridges so close together. They recommend that this railroad bridge and the highway bridge be continued together as now.

If I did not misunderstand the gentleman from Wisconsin, he stated, in answer to a question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had reported that it was practicably impossible, or at least extremely inconvenient, to erect a depot elsewhere than upon the location shown here on this map. Now, I want to read exactly what the Commissioners did say on this subject, and I hope the gentlemen will give attention:

> The present station was established under authority of an act approved March 23, 1871, by the board of aldermen and common council of the city of Washington, at a time when the people were supposed to have a voice in the affairs of the District government. It is therefore assumed that this location was the choice of the people at that time.

So this location, so far as these reports go, is based upon a mere assumption that the location was the choice of the people at the time—an assumption based on the fact that the location was authorized by the action of the board of aldermen and the common council of the city of Washington.

Then the Commissioners continue:

> This action was confirmed by the act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, since which time the company has been in quiet possession.

Now listen to what the Commissioners say further:

> The advisability of requiring a change of location at this time is left to the wisdom of Congress.

That is what the Commissioners say. They do not say that it is not a feasible engineering proposition to have this station located elsewhere; they leave the matter to the wisdom of Congress, and whatever action we take must be taken on our own responsibility. The Commissioners do not recommend that the station remain where it is. Neither do they say that it is impossible or impracticable as an engineering feat to erect a new station south of the Mall.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do they recommend the proposed change?

Mr. SIMS. They leave it to the wisdom of Congress. They make no recommendation. Congress is left to act entirely upon its own responsibility as to where this station shall be placed. The Commissioners do not assume any responsibility in the matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the depot can be placed here at this point [indicating], as we recommend in our suggestions, and with less cost to the railroad company, than to establish it at this other point upon the Mall, as indicated in the report of the majority of the committee. Furthermore, the bill proposes the removal or destruction of the present depot building. And so far as damage results to the railroad company by the destruction of its depot is concerned, that is not increased if it shall be placed at the point we indicate rather than on the Mall.

But I do not wish to take a utilitarian view of the question. We are not legislating now exclusively for the benefit of the people of Washington. The city, as has been truly said in the course of the debate, is not a city for the District of Columbia and for the people of the District of Columbia, nor for the people of a special locality, but for the people of the whole United States, the people of the nation. They are all interested in it and in its development.

The traveling public would certainly be willing to submit to the little, insignificant inconvenience of going this distance across the Mall to the depot rather than destroy that magnificent park, as you propose to do. This Mall, set apart and approved of by George Washington himself—if that adornment of the city, with all of its future possibilities, is to give way to a mere question of the convenience of a few people, then why not place the depot where the greater number of the citizens of Washington could reach it with less inconvenience than where it is now located? We know that on Sixth street, the present location, it is not in the center of the city, is not near to the greatest number of the principal hotels of the city, and is not near to the greatest number of the people of the city; and I claim that, legislating as we are for the people of the whole United States, it is our duty to protect their property and look to their interests, because we are called on here, not as the representatives of the people of the city of Washington, not as representing a particular locality, not as representing the people of the city where this property happens to be located, but here is a case where the people of every locality in the nation are interested.

Mr. SHATTUC. In your estimate, as a railroad expert, how much less yard room would it take to accommodate the business of the railroad company by having a double-end depot rather than a single-end one?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know. I do not care. I can not tell, and it is not a matter of consequence in this connection. I repeat, I am not here representing the people of the city of Washington, or any locality, in a matter of this kind. I undertake, as well as I can, to represent the interests of all of our people throughout all parts of the country, and I can not tell the gentleman whether it would cost more or less.

Mr. SHATTUC. Naturally it would cost less.

Mr. SIMS. Well, that may be; but it is all the better for the railroad company if it does. But, so far as I am concerned, if it was a question of equity in connection with this matter, I should be in favor of the appropriation of every dollar required to reimburse the railroad company rather than allow them to destroy this magnificent park.

Mr. OTJEN. Is there room enough on the site you propose to build a depot?

Mr. SIMS. Undoubtedly. And in that connection let me read what is said by those who are more capable of judging than I. I am merely giving a statement of the case as it appears to me, and I would rather quote those, if I can, who have had more opportunity of investigating it. We are told in the report of the minority of the committee that—

> One of the most important features of the plan will be found in the new site assigned to the Pennsylvania Railroad station, now a serious obstruction to the development of the new park. Its present location, if retained, would utterly destroy the harmonious arrangement of the ovals and sunken transverse roads, which are the distinguishing characteristics of the present design. The passage of trains through a park, whether over, or under, or on the level, is always to be deprecated. It destroys the restfulness and isolation of the place, and it should be prevented by any arrangement that is not absolutely inimical to the comfort and business necessities of the public. A lightning express is quite incompatable with a green garden and singing birds.

Mr. Chairman, we paid $4,000 to get the opinion of an expert on this very question, and he tells us, as I have just shown you, that the present location is a serious obstruction to the improvement of this park, and that if that location is retained it destroys the harmony of the arrangement of the ovals and sunken transverse roads which are the distinctive characteristics of the present design.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. With the approval of the opinion of the expert to whom you have referred, are you ready to vote the necessary sum to carry out his recommendations?

Mr. SIMS. Not beyond that included in the Mall. The gentleman will understand that this expert takes in a great deal of other outside property in his suggestions.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you are not willing to follow him in the suggestions he has made and which you embody in your report?

Mr. SIMS. Not to the extent of the improvement of the whole territory included in the report, for I have not examined it. I do not know whether on an examination I should approve the whole of his plan or not. But in so far as the Mall itself is concerned, I certainly think we should take what he says about it, because, so far as the Mall itself is concerned, we can take what this expert says and consider it for what it is worth, without considering that part of these plans which reach beyond the Mall.

Now, further, I quote:

> The passage of trains through a park, whether over or under or on the level, is always to be deprecated. It destroys the restfulness and isolation of the place, and it should be prevented by any arrangement that is not absolutely inimical to the comfort and business necessities of the public. A lightning express is quite incompatible with a green garden and singing birds.

This is the point I want to call attention to:

> The proposed site for the station, it will be seen, is large and commodious, and situated directly in front of the transverse road at Seventh street, which is made as wide as Pennsylvania avenue, and only 1,600 feet from its nearest borders. The station as now situated, in the heart of the proposed park would completely destroy the unity of the park design, for it stands at the very point where the loss would be the greatest.

Now, gentlemen, I have no feeling of animosity toward a railroad company just because it is a railroad company, or anything of that sort. I am not addressing myself to that question at all. I would give the Pennsylvania Railroad just as much as I would give any other railroad, but I do not understand that it hurts a railroad company as a property to have its depot located farther back. I do not see that it would prevent a single passenger from visiting Washington, nor would it reduce the hauling of freight one pound; and, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, it would certainly be cheaper than to build upon the present plan.

Then, as to the question of the depot being there permanently, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, spoke with reference to existing conditions. I want to say right here that if existing conditions are to remain, he is exceedingly logical. In that view of the matter he is correct, because certainly we had better have a permanent depot there, costing a million and a half dollars, than have the car shed which is located there now. But, as far as my information goes, it has never been understood from the time this railroad came into the Mall up to the present hour that it was contemplated that these present holdings should be permanent. I find that in 1890, in the discussion with reference to the location of this road upon this Mall, an amendment passed this House requiring the company to move its depot back to the junction of these avenues. It did not become a law, but it did pass the House, and that shows the disposition, opinion, and judgment of Congress at that time. Ten years ago they understood they had a right to move this depot back, and they passed an amendment that did it. I will not take the time to read it.

But as far as I am concerned as a member of this committee, I waive any question as to Garfield Park. I waive all other objections to the bill. But I do think that to take this part of this park and give it to the railroad company at this time, either with reference to the benefit of the railroad company or to the convenience of the people of the District of Columbia, is something that we should not do. If the precedent is established of cutting this great park in two, either for convenience to the public or profit to a business enterprise, where is it going to end? Why not go into the White House grounds and have a railroad station south of the White House, if you are going to consider the question of convenience only? I do hope that in this matter something more than the mere utilitarian idea of convenience will be considered. This improvement should not be made in such a way as to be useless to the public or in such a way as to make it a great burden. But to take it out of the Mall will not do that. It will not injure the railroad company and will prevent the utter ruin of this property as a park.

At this time, just after the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the removal of the Government of the United States to Washington, when it was said upon the floor of this House only a few days ago that this was designed to be, and must be, the most beautiful city on the face of the earth—within this short time afterwards we are asked here to make impossible a part of that very plan of beautification by cutting into the most distinctive feature of our city parks and improvements. Certainly this is a most untimely and unwise proposition, which, if carried out, will be a matter of regret to all who come after us.

Mr. OTJEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. OTJEN. I understand you, then, that it is feasible and that there is room enough to build the depot where the junctions of the road are, at the point marked "Yard" on the map. I understand you that there is plenty of room there?

Mr. SIMS. Of course I am not a railroad man and can not answer that personally; but those who ought to know inform me that there is room enough.

Mr. OTJEN. It is claimed by some that there is not sufficient room there to build the depot. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. SIMS. There is, or can be had by purchase or condemnation. There are some Government reservations there, and all the room that is needed, as I understand it, can be acquired. There is plenty of room, as I understand it, for all the depot facilities that they would get by having it where it is located in this bill, if I understand correctly. I speak from information and not as a railroad expert.

Now, I admit that a while ago Colonel Bingham was criticised for the position he took on this question; but Colonel Bingham's ideas and opinions are certainly worth considering, and should receive the weight that they are entitled to on their face, and I will ask you, to that extent, to give heed to what he says.

I do not know what his course has been heretofore, but I know he is in a position to discharge a duty, and he has done so; and it is the duty of this House to give careful consideration to what he and General Wilson and Colonel Allen say about this matter. I will only read a paragraph from what Colonel Bingham says, which follows:

> Considering that this park was specially reserved in the formation of the city by our immortal President Washington, it does seem unpatriotic, and even irreverent, that Washington's ideas should not be carried out, particularly as no local interests would be seriously damaged by keeping this area for the park it was intended to be; and the national interests—for this is not merely a town of local interest, but one which is the pride of our great nation—will be very much improved and advanced in the estimation of the entire country by keeping this area free from commercial encroachment. Further argument on this point is deemed unnecessary, as a simple inspection of the map carries its own argument.

Mr. POWERS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. I understand from your argument that your objection to this proposed change is upon the ground that the Mall should be preserved as a park for the public benefit?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS. Now, if preserved, if the railroad is removed, streets will cross it the same as now, will they not?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS. What will you do with the balance of the land, unoccupied land, between the streets?

Mr. SIMS. That is already park, and to be continued as park.

Mr. POWERS. Exactly. That is, a place where the public can do what they please; it is a loafing ground for the public.

Mr. SIMS. We consider it a park.

Mr. POWERS. Well, now, if you leave a street for the passage of freight teams and other carriages to the depot farther south, do you not leave it as much an uncouth sight for the sight-seers as you would by putting up a nice-looking building, as proposed by this bill? As I understand, the tracks are to be elevated and the elevated structure is to be ornamental. Now, would not that please the visitors to this city altogether more than to see these heavy freight wagons run down that street from Pennsylvania avenue, as they would have to?

Mr. SIMS. Will not freight wagons have to run anyway?

Mr. POWERS. They do not run the whole distance across the Mall in the present state of affairs. Now, a great deal has been said about people coming to this city to see it, and they want to see something that would be pleasing to the eye. I want to know if a fine building, such as is proposed here, with the elevated track made, as the gentleman from Illinois said, "æsthetically made," will not be as pleasing an object to the eye as it will be to make that a commercial highway to the depot situated farther south, and with a highway across the who e Mall?

Mr. SIMS. I understand the gentleman is making a little speech in my time.

Mr. POWERS. No; I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. SIMS. It is only a matter of judgment; and I want to ask the gentleman from Vermont, as he has referred to the road, whether he thinks an elevated road with 17 railroad tracks running over it, with lightning express, freight, and other trains thundering in and out all hours of the day and night, would be a spectacle that the sight-seers would like to see?

Mr. POWERS. I think the people who come here from your city and mine would be glad to see an elevated track with seventeen trains rushing in a magnificent building every minute of the day, as you suggest. I think they would be impressed with the greatness of this country and the beauty of the city of Washington. But there is another point to which I desire to call your attention. How many of these parks in the city of Washington do we now have for the use of the public here? We have got them scattered all over the city, from one end to the other. The gentleman does not expect that the visitors would spend their whole time looking at parks?

Mr. SIMS. Well, then, the gentleman's idea, according to his own statement, is that we have no need for these parks, and that they should be taken for railroad and other purposes.

Mr. POWERS. My idea is, we have ten times as many as we need. I should like to see public buildings put on these parks instead of compelling the Government to pay big prices to private owners.

Mr. SIMS. And that is only the beginning of the end of them. I said, as I believe, that this means the beginning of the end of the Mall, and the gentleman from Vermont certainly furnishes proof that I am correct, for he says we have already too many parks. Therefore he is in favor of yielding it up for this purpose, and the House can judge the difference in sentiment that governs the gentleman from Vermont and myself. I am something more than a mere utilitarian. I would like to see the man who would run a railroad through the Hermitage, Jackson's home in Tennessee, simply because some one wanted to get a railroad at his door instead of going a few feet farther.

I do hope that the level of the sentiment of this country has not got down to the utilitarian point which will destroy everything that is left by the heroes of this country, especially George Washington—the Father of his Country—to remind us of them and their teachings. He made this Mall, he laid it out, and he approved of it. Why not destroy Mount Vernon if you can build a railroad depot or a manufacturing plant there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. From an æsthetic standpoint, what is the present condition of the Hermitage?

Mr. CARMACK. "A thing of beauty and a joy forever." [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may be a joy forever; I think it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I have not seen the Hermitage for twenty years, and therefore I am not in a position to answer the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I wish the gentleman could see it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. But if I never see it I will not vote to erect a railroad depot on it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It would be greatly improved by such a thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman can have the benefit of what he thinks would improve such places. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the sacred Mall has not already been desecrated?

Mr. SIMS. I think it has.

Mr. PEARRE. Was it the original idea to have it traversed by streets at all?

Mr. SIMS. I think it was.

Mr. PEARRE. As a matter of fact, the original plan contemplated no streets through it at all.

Mr. SIMS. Well, I can not answer that, but my information is that it did.

Mr. PEARRE. It now has streets through it, and has street railways running through it.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to correct the gentleman from Maryland. The original plan by l'Enfant shows streets traversing the Mall.

Mr. SIMS. That is my information. I was with the gentleman from Missouri when we were shown the plan. But now the idea that because streets are running through there and carriage drives, splendid streets, we should authorize an immense million and a half dollar depot upon stilts to be erected that obscures the view from one end of the Mall to the other—because this depot has for some reason or other been located where it is, does it follow that we must perpetuate that error or desecration by adding another one to it? I will not do it as far as I am concerned. The future historian of this country shall not chronicle a number of us with a vote saying that a 14-acre depot for any railroad company shall be located in the midst of a park laid out by Washington himself, and designed to be as permanent as the seat of government itself, in its whole and in its unity and entirety.

We can place some car stables on this park if we want to utilize it. Why not permit that to be done if it is only a question of dollars and cents? But if, as I said, it comes to making an appropriation of a million dollars to the railroad company to compensate it for withdrawing rather than retaining the depot where it is, I say vote it, and the people can pay it, but they can never restore the beauty of the park when once despoiled and ruined.

Mr. LENTZ. I would like to ask the gentleman if this property has been put up and offered for sale by the Government?

Mr. SIMS. I never heard of it, and I would oppose anything of that sort.

Mr. LENTZ. Would not it be a good deal better to offer it for sale than to give it away?

Mr. SIMS. I think either would ruin the park, and I am opposed to ruining the park. Another thing, this bill contemplates the tearing down and removal of the Fish Commission building. I call your attention to that for what it is worth. I am not making any fight on that, but I call attention to it because attention was not called to it by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. We are making this fight to preserve the park by placing the depot only about 1,000 feet farther south, a depot just as good for railroad purposes, just as good for the public use, and which does not damage the appearance of that section of the city in which it would be located, but would be absolutely for the benefit of that section of the city. That is all we ask you to do—to amend the bill so as to eliminate this objectionable feature of it. This House has never understood, this Congress of the United States has never understood it in any other light than that we had the right to require this depot to be removed at any time. Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-one minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question. For the last eighteen years almost every Congress has had to consider some plan or other for changing the location of railroads within the District limits and eliminating grade crossings. But this is the first time that the rights of the people here represented by the city authorities and the railroad corporations have ever come to an agreement. It is the first time that a plan has been adopted by the parties largely in interest to this dispute. I am not sure that this plan is perfect, but I believe it is the only feasible one. It is the only one that probably can pass the two Houses, and while I do not agree with all the provisions in this bill, I believe that there is so much of good to be accomplished by it that I am ready to give it my support.

The objections urged now by gentlemen belonging to the minority of the committee seem to be reduced to a single one. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has specifically said that he would be content to let the company have the advantages proposed in the bill, save those that it would have in the Mall. The argument of the gentleman last on the floor has all been with regard to the desecration of the Mall. It is astonishing to observe the solicitude that certain gentlemen have at this time developed for the æsthetic possibilities of that Mall. For a hundred years Congress has had the opportunity to make the Mall a thing of beauty. Look at it to-day. Seventy years elapsed before any movement was made toward its improvement. The intimates of George Washington, who probably ought to have had as much solicitude to carry out his recommendations as gentlemen on this floor, allowed all the opportunities to come and go without any improvement.

Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Adams, Jackson, Van Buren, Polk, Pierce, Buchanan, and all the rest for seventy years saw no necessity for carrying out the æsthetic views of the Father of his Country. Thirty years ago the people of this District—not the Congress, but the aldermen and the common council, the elective representatives of the people of Washington—authorized the use to which the railroad company is now putting a portion of the Mall. It was the act of the elective representative of the people of Washington, who thought it a desirable disposition to make of that part of the property which was then under their control. Congress approved it. It gave to the railroad company certain rights. I am not able to say precisely what those rights were. I do not suppose the company claims a fee, but they claim a franchise, and I undertake to say you can not dispossess them of their rights without making compensation. Effort after effort has been made to dispossess them. All such efforts have been futile.

Again, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen talk of "this magnificent park," the Mall, as though it were a park. It is not. It is a succession of parks. It is intersected by thirteen or fourteen streets—yes; seventeen, I believe—so that it is seventeen little parks that you have. There are five railroads crossing that tract of land. All those railways have acquired rights there, and no one proposes to disturb them.

Gentlemen say that the use of a portion of the Mall situated midway between its extremes destroys it. Is that true? There are 600 acres in that park, I am told. When you have taken 14 acres out of the middle of it you still have two parks, if you choose to call them such, of substantially 300 acres each. Is that a "destruction" of the Mall?

Gentlemen seem to think it necessary that they should have from one end to the other of this Mall an unobstructed view. If that be so, then divest it of its trees and its shrubbery and all other ornament. The fact is, when you stand on the Capitol Dome you have a bird's-eye view of the park; you can see it all, but when you are upon a level you can not. The very ornamentation that you have made obstructs continuous view. Such obstruction as already exists is what you will have by reason of this improvement.

It is said that this park must be artistic in character—as much so as possible. But, at the most, the greatest harm that it can be said this improvement will accomplish is to reduce the area of the park. It would still make two parks instead of one, even if this improvement is to be an impassable barrier. Yet such impassability is not comtemplated. I do not know whether it would be possible to secure legislation upon the lines insisted upon by the gentleman from Tennessee; but I do believe there are compensations in this matter. The gentleman from Missouri insists that we are paying largely for what we get under this arrangement. I do not so understand. The only cost to the public in money is the $250,000 estimated as the cost of the elevation of the streets crossing over the road and $50,000 for condemnation.

It is not right or proper to charge the proposed bridge to this enterprise, because that is one of the enterprises for the improvement of the District for which the people have been clamoring for years. That is a work that will have to be done; and the construction of this bridge will do away with the necessity for larger, much larger, appropriation for that ornamental bridge that certain people of the District are now so earnestly advocating. That ought not to be regarded as an expenditure that the people are making to secure the improvement now under consideration.

As to the property given or permitted to be used, there are speculative estimates with regard to its value. Certain gentlemen who have reported upon this subject say that the portion contained in Garfield Park is worth about 30 cents a foot. If so, then that donation is not an extravagant one.

What is the value of the portion of the Mall that is to be used? Remember, you are not giving the fee. You are simply giving the use, which, under the terms of the bill can be recalled whenever Congress so elects; for I find in the bill a provision reserving to Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at pleasure.

What is that franchise worth? The gentleman from Missouri says it is worth $2,000,000. How are we to know? Do you propose to sell that property in order to realize $2,000,000 or any other sum? Yet you can not realize money without you sell parts of the Mall. In the language of the gentleman from Tennessee, you are going to destroy the Mall. Do you propose to do that? No one does. If the proposition for a sale were made, who thinks that this property would sell for the enormous sum suggested by the gentleman—nearly $150,000 an acre?

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this bill will pass. I believe it is the best arrangement that can be made. While not the best possible, I think it is the best that can be made, and that it will so appear to the majority of those composing the two Houses. And if, Mr. Chairman, this is not passed now, I believe we will go over the same contentions, bickerings, and difficulties which we have had in the past every time this measure comes up.

Some gentleman asked a while ago as to the number of deaths at grade crossings in this city. I do not know the total number, but it is stated in the report that at one point alone in this city, at one grade crossing, 7 lives have been destroyed, and I think it safe to assume that not less than 50 have been destroyed by the pernicious practice of continuing these grade crossings in various parts of the city. Under the provisions of this bill we get rid of them, and still leave 12 crossings in the city in a distance of about a mile and a half, which is ample for the convenience of all persons who have occasion to cross at these places, while at the same time we promote the safety of the public. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 69.

Mr. COWHERD, Mr. SIMS, and others demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BABCOCK and Mr. COWHERD were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 62.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill S. 1929, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1929; and, pending that, I offer the following resolution, upon which I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That general debate on the bill S. 1929, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, be closed at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m. to-day.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the chairman of the committee to withhold that motion for a moment to see if we can not agree upon time, or at least permit me to make a statement of facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always patient with efforts to secure agreements.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have offered everything which I think I could offer for the purpose of reaching an agreement, but being satisfied that there was no intention to reach any agreement on the part of the gentlemen on the other side, I felt it incumbent upon me to make this motion.

Mr. COWHERD. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if it is not a fact that we agreed to close the general debate at half past 3 o'clock to-day?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is well known to the House that the Committee on the District of Columbia has only this day, and if we desire to reach a vote on this bill it is important that the bill and amendments should be before the House at an early hour this afternoon. There will be ample time for gentlemen to discuss the provisions under the five-minute rule. The bill, of course, will be read under the five-minute rule for debate and amendments as soon as the general debate has been closed.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the chairman of the committee will permit me, I wish to say that there has been no attempt to delay the passage of the measure. All we have asked is time to state our views fully upon it. Discussion has been upon the merits of the plan proposed. Nobody has been heard upon it but one or two members of the committee, and neither occupied more than one-half the time to which he was entitled, yielding up fully one-half of the remainder. Quite a number of gentlemen have asked to be heard on the measure. Several have made requests to me for time, and I submit that when the bill was up last time, and the only question was the permission for side tracks, and the question of moving the depot came up, four times as much time was allowed for debate as has been given to-day. I only ask a reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withhold his motion for the previous question to allow a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly. I would like to know what the gentleman has to suggest.

Mr. COWHERD. I think it would be reasonable to ask to close the general debate at 4 o'clock. If gentlemen are permitted to talk in general debate they won't be so anxious to go on under the five-minute rule, and we will get along just as fast, and faster; and I submit it is not proper to cut off debate in this way.

I request to be permitted to ask unanimous consent to close the general debate at 4 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, the gentleman himself only asked until 3.30 a short time ago.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield the demand for the previous question to permit the request to be submitted?

Mr. BABCOCK. The request for unanimous consent? I will yield for that purpose, although I must object to it myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 4 o'clock to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. BABCOCK. I object.

Mr. COWHERD. Will you consent to 3.40?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will consent to 3.20.

Mr. LENTZ. Let us have a roll call. They are afraid to discuss the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the House to discuss a request for the previous question?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will ask unanimous consent, and will agree with the gentleman on his own proposition to close general debate at 3.30.

Mr. COWHERD. You have consumed fifteen minutes since then. Make it 3.40 and we will consent.

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. COWHERD. Give us the twenty-five minutes and we will consent.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will submit in connection with that, as the gentleman has assured me that he wants to reach a vote upon this proposition—I will couple with his request an agreement that we vote on this bill at 4.30.

Mr. LENTZ. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that general debate close at 3.40, and that a vote be had upon the bill at what time?

Mr. BABCOCK. Say 5 o'clock.

Mr. RIDGELY, Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts, and others. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the question is on the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 75.

Mr. COWHERD. I demand tellers.

Mr. BABCOCK. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 87 answered "present" 8, not voting 104; as follows:

YEAS—157.

So the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. CROMER with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. FREER with Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama.

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I was.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. KITCHIN's name was called and he voted "no," as above stated.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. LATIMER. I was. I heard it called, but thought I had voted, and let it pass over.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. LATIMER's name was called, and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I was in the House and did not hear my name called on the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. BARTLETT's name was called, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I desire to recall that vote and be marked present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. SMALL's name, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BALL. He returned to the Hall too late to vote, otherwise I would have voted "aye." Therefore I will let my pair stand.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. It is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the Chair decide that a motion to reconsider a vote is a dilatory motion? It has never been so decided by any other Speaker of this House.

The SPEAKER. The motion prevails, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOODY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will be in order. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill S. 1929, and under the order of the House general debate is now closed, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, and also the following amendments recommended by the committee:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Eighth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Eleventh."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "for," insert the words "not less than," and after the word "two" insert the words "nor more than four."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on these amendments.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to understand what the amendments are.

The CHAIRMAN. They have just been reported by the Clerk.

Mr. COWHERD. But the Clerk read them so rapidly that we could not hear what they were.

The CHAIRMAN. They are indicated by striking out and inserting the language in italics. Unless there is objection the Chair will put them in gross.

Mr. COWHERD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Eighth" and insert "Eleventh."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, is this open to discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the recommittal of this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia. My hope is that they will be able to harmonize this bill with the plans presented by Mr. Parsons for the improvement of the Mall. I would like to see the question of the convenience and beauty of design realized. I believe that it would be more convenient to the public if the station could be on Pennsylvania avenue. I believe, also, that that can be done and at the same time retain substantially the design presented to us by Mr. Parsons. Now, I wish to say that this act, according to my information, has been passed in the Senate. It was passed one year ago. Subsequent to the passage of this act the Congress of the United States, by appropriation, provided for plans of the Mall, for plans to be designed by an eminent landscape architect to be appointed by the President of the United States, so that the work of planning the Mall was inaugurated subsequent to the passage of this bill by the Senate. These plans were not before the Senate when this bill was passed. Now, these plans have received the approval of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the approval of Colonel Bingham, who is in charge of the public grounds of the District of Columbia, and I do not understand that they have been properly considered in the framing of this bill.

It is true that those plans provide for a station to the south of the Mall, with a view to maintaining the beauty of proportions of the Mall itself. But possibly if the attention of Mr. Parsons were called to the necessity of having the station on Pennsylvania avenue, so as to meet the convenience of the public, a modification of those plans might be made—a modification of the plans presented by the railroad company might be made which would unite the considerations both of convenience and of beauty.

Now, briefly stated, this design of Mr. Parsons does away with the three or four divided parks to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has alluded. It is true that for purposes of convenience four of the streets of the city pass through this park—Third street, Seventh street, Twelfth street, and Fifteenth street. But they pass through the park in such a way as to give the appearance of lowered streets, though really the grade is maintained.

How is that done? Simply by the genius of the landscape architect. The design provides for the heaping up of earth on each side of the street and the planting of trees. Thus the street is practically obscured from view from any part of the park, just as much as if it passed through a tunnel. In this manner the park effect is preserved all the way from the Capitol to Fifteenth street. Convenience of access to every part of the park is secured by bridges passing over those streets—bridges forming a part of the park. Thus convenience of travel through the parks for traffic of every kind is secured, while at the same time the park of I do not know how many acres is absolutely preserved in its length and its breadth as a perfect unit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman has not confined his remarks to this amendment. I move that debate on the amendment close in one minute.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question). The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. GAINES. I call for a division.

The question being again taken; there were—ayes 85, noes 35.

So the motion of Mr. BABCOCK was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "for" insert "not less than."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BABCOCK. I submit that the Clerk has not read the whole amendment. There is one amendment applying to lines 1 and 2.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. There are two distinct propositions. I do not see how they can be treated as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the proposition just read and the one that the Clerk will now read constitute but one amendment. The Clerk will now read the whole of the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "for," in line 1, insert "not less than," and after the word "two," in the same line, insert "nor more than four;" so as to read "not less than two nor more than four tracks."

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a separate vote on these two propositions. There are, in fact, two amendments. Each is a separate proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that the ainendment just read is a single amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But if the Chair will hear me a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on the question. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not filibustering. There are two substantive propositions. One is to insert the words "not less than;" the other is to insert the words "nor more than four." I could move to strike out "four" and insert "three." Let us proceed in an orderly manner and in accordance with the rules, even if this bill is to be rushed through. My point is that there are two substantive propositions. If the Chair chooses to rule otherwise, it can do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled and does not retract its ruling.

[Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BABCOCK. I move, Mr. Chairman, that debate on the amendment and amendments thereto close in one minute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not close debate under the rules of the House in that manner if any gentleman desires to discuss the proposition. The rules allow ten minutes' debate—five minutes for and five against the proposition.

Mr. BABCOCK. What rules does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I refer to the rules of the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The rules of the committee prohibit it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rules allow five minutes for and five minutes against the proposition. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in order to close the debate if any man wants to occupy that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order. Rule XXIII, paragraph 6, seems to apply to this.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor if he desires to be heard.

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe the five minutes against the amendment have been exhausted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rules permit five minutes for and five minutes against an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no one who desires to speak for the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But there are some gentlemen who desire to speak against this bill if they are given an opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question may arise again, but the present view of the Chair is that after the five minutes' debate has begun, though not completed, it is entirely within the province of the committee to close the debate. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Tennessee on the subject.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not in the power of the committee to change a rule of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Tennessee desires to be heard on this?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rule, Mr. Chairman, as I have always understood it, upon amendments in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule is that five minutes shall be allowed the mover of an amendment and five minutes to any gentleman opposing the amendment. Now, when you move to close the debate before the ten minutes are exhausted, I say it is not in order, if any gentleman wants to debate it.

The statement is made that no gentleman desires to debate the question. If that is true, why there is no necessity to move to close the debate. I submit that we ought to proceed in order, and I think the Chair will find that the position I take is exactly in accordance with the rule that five minutes are allowed for and five minutes against any proposed amendment, provided any gentleman desires to speak. If no gentleman desires to occupy the floor, that is another matter. I do not know whether any gentleman desires to occupy the floor or not. I do not.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I desire time to finish my remarks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this is a very plain matter, and the gentleman from Tennessee has simply thrust a proposition before the committee and declined to read the rules of the House. Here is the rule of the House that completely answers the gentleman's contention. It is found on page 284 of the Manual.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Clause 5 of Rule XXIII.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Just wait a moment and I will read it myself.

6. The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate).

That is the law, and the gentleman is perfectly familiar with it, quite as much so as the Chairman of the committee is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I respectfully ask the reading of the preceding clause.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the preceding clause is answered by that clause.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The first clause says that the man who proposes the amendment may have five minutes, and then it says that the man opposed to it may have five minutes, subject to the rule below.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, then, you repeal the clause below.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in my experience I have never known any objection to be made to ten minutes' debate upon an amendment. I desire to read the clause of the rule to which I refer, that it may go into the RECORD:

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon.

So I say the rule is explicit. If any gentleman claims the floor in opposition to the amendment, he is entitled to the floor. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Several MEMBERS. Rule! Rule!

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You can not have a ruling until the Chair says so.

Mr. PAYNE. The Chair is not compelled to listen to the gentleman any longer than——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not yield to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not yield to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not be taken off the floor by the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry. I do not yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is entitled to the floor just so long as the Chair is pleased to hear him, and no longer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York says he rises to a point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. I rose in the first place to make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee could only proceed in the discretion of the Chair; that whenever the Chair had heard sufficient debate the Chair could then make his decision. The Chair had risen to make his decision when the gentleman from Tennessee interfered.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] had the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the Chair declines to hear me, I do not want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Chair is quite ready to rule, but will not rule while the gentleman from Tennessee desires in good faith to address the Chair. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I thank the Chair. I have no desire to delay the debate. I have read clause 5 of Rule XXIII, which expressly contains the contention which I make most respectfully. I thank the Chair for this parliamentary protection, and now yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that by section 5, five minutes' debate is allowed for an amendment proposed and five minutes against that amendment and then the debate closes itself without any motion. The sixth paragraph, which was adopted ten years later than the one just referred to, provided for closing debate at any time after it shall have begun. It would have been entirely unnecessary if it had been limited to the condition described in paragraph 5, because the debate then is closed without any motion, or upon the interposition of the point of order by any gentleman on the floor. The Chair, therefore, rules that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is in order, that debate upon this amendment be closed in one minute.

Mr. BABCOCK. My motion was upon the amendment and the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that all debate upon the section and upon the amendment be closed in one minute.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do I understand if that is passed no further amendments can be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. They would be in order, but not debatable.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They could be offered, but not debated?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether the minority members of the committee, who have amendments to offer after the committee amendments have been disposed of, are to be prevented from offering their amendments and explaining them? I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it is his desire to cut us off from explaining our amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. That is in control of the committee. The amendments would be in order after the adoption of this amendment, but there could be no debate.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman can save time by giving us five minutes to present them.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BABCOCK; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 62.

Mr. COWHERD. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] will take their places and act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 117, noes 51.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 1929 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, without examination, that the motion for the previous question is not necessary on this motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What was the motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to amend that by making it 5 minutes to 12 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman moved the previous question on his motion, which cuts off any amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I offer the amendment to make it 5 minutes to 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the motion for the previous question. It will be in order to obviate the very purpose that is manifested by the supplemental motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 40.

Mr. COWHERD. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 46, answered "present" 9, not voting 151; as follows:

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BERRY. I was.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. BERRY'S name; and he voted "no," as above recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. O'GRADY with Mr. FITZGERALD of New York.

Mr. WISE with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. THROPP with Mr. BRANTLEY.

For this day:

Mr. MERCER with Mr. BELL.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. SHAFROTH.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were 139 ayes and 43 noes.

Mr. COWHERD. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-eight gentlemen rising, a sufficient number, the yeas and nays are ordered.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for increase of salary of United States consul at Liege, Belgium—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for transcript of records and plats, General Land Office—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury submitting an estimate of appropriations for completing public buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury submitting an estimate of appropriation for completing certain buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, for the attention of Congress, a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, with documents relating to the case of Alexander Moulton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed (all but documents).

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers in pension claim of Eleanor McDevitt, for action by Congress—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed (letter only).

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a copy of letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, certain papers in the case of Jane Johnson, for the attention of Congress—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed (all but documents).

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, papers in the case of Richard Howell, alias George Carroll, which are recommended to the attention of Congress—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed (all but documents).

A letter from the president of the Civil Service Commission, relating to the disposition of certain papers in the records of the Commission—to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill of the House (H. R. 12904) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2064); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JENKINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12546) to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northeastern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2065); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioners of education provided for by said act, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2069); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 19, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate of appropriation for rental of rooms for the accommodation of the Light-House Board, $504; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA PAY OF DISABLED SURFMEN, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 6th instant, a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury and a communication of the Auditor for the Treasury giving a list of the claims rejected and disallowed disabled surfmen, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Oregon at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900. The communication will be placed on the files of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. In regard to the announcement the Chair has just made I should like to inquire of the Chair—I have not recently examined the law—whether the certificates of the appointment of electors are not communicated to the Chair in his capacity as a public officer, whether the Senate has any relation to them whatever, and whether they are not in the custody of the President of the Senate? The suggestion of the Chair was that the communication should be placed on the files of the Senate. I merely wish to ask the Chair to have the question considered as to whether such communications should go to the files of the Senate or should be in the personal or official custody of the Chair without any control of the Senate over them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not informed. The Chair understands that the law requires that the certificates of the action of the electors themselves must be presented to the President of the Senate, and so forth, but he has no knowledge with regard to these particular certificates.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has done nothing inconsistent with the theory I suggested; but when the Chair said that such communications go to the files, I did not know but it might be understood that they went onto the Senate files. I think the predecessors of the present occupant of the chair in his high office have had a safe under their personal control where all these documents have been deposited, and the Senate has had no control over them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the present law requires that these communications shall be sent to the Secretary of State, to be communicated by him to each House of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. This communication comes from the Secretary of State?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; then there are separate copies sent to the Chair of the action of the electors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the electors have not yet voted, and therefore the certificates showing the action of the electors have yet to come. The certificates now under consideration are the certificates of the choice of the electors by the States. They do go upon the files of the Senate, and they belong to Congress, in order that Congress may, if it sees fit, set on foot a preliminary investigation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New Hampshire is right.

CHARLES A. BOUTELLE.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 277) authorizing the appointment of Charles A. Boutelle as a captain on the retired list of the Navy was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like very much, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, to have the joint resolution considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President of the United States to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint upon the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of captain, Charles A. Boutelle, formerly a volunteer lieutenant on the active list of the Navy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREER COUNTY, TEX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2582) to provide for the establishment of the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River; to ascertain the amount of taxes collected by the State of Texas in what was formerly known as Greer County, and the expenditures made on account of said county by said State, and for other purposes, to which the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is called.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senate to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives. They are unimportant, and are satisfactory to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendments of the House of Representatives; which were, on page 5, line 5, after "lands," to insert "; and to ascertain the sum received from sale, if any, of any public lands sold or disposed of in Greer County by the State of Texas, and the present value of such lands;" on page 7, line 1, to strike out "enforce" and insert "properly care for the interests of the United States in making such investigation and in carrying out the purposes of;" on page 7, line 1, after "report," to insert "in detail;" and on page 7, line 2, after "practicable," to insert ": Provided, That the State of Texas shall defray the expenses of presenting its own case and claims."

The amendments were concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12447) to amend an act approved June 1, A. D. 1900, entitled "An act to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Middletown and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kushequa, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Philippines and Alaska; which were referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the First Presbyterian Church of Ford City, and the African Methodist Episcopal Church of Kittanning; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kushequa; of the congregations of the Free Methodist Church of Nealton, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ford City, and the Presbyterian Church of Worthington; of the Frazer Union of Chester County; of 73 citizens of Kushequa; of Graham Post and M. Edgar Richard Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pottstown; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Allegheny County; of the congregation of the McDowell Memorial Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, and of Sarah B. Steppe, of Allegheny, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of 65 citizens of Juniata County, Pa., and a petition of 14 citizens of Wilkesbarre, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the McDowell Memorial Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, and of the congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Allegheny, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in countries inhabited by native races; which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also presented a memorial of the First and Third and the Traders' National banks, the Merchants and Mechanics' Bank, the Scranton Savings Bank, the County Savings Bank and Trust Company, the Dime Deposit and Discount Bank, the Lackawanna Trust and Safe Deposit Company, and the West Side Bank, all of Scranton, in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the discrimination shown in the tax levied upon the capital of banks, and praying for the enactment of legislation to remove this unjust and oppressive tax; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the memorial of Charles M. Taylor's Sons, managers of the Philadelphia Trans-Atlantic Line, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called ship-subsidy bill in its present form; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUARLES presented a petition of 11 citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. I present the petition of Mr. David Lubin, of New York, in behalf of the State granges of California, Oregon, Illinois, Washington, Missouri, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, praying that protection be given to agricultural staples by placing a bounty on exports as part of the act for the protection of shipping by subsidies. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD and also as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the petition has already been printed as a document.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is a different and a new petition, embracing some other material, and I do not think it exists in the shape of a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator if the paper he presents is not the same as the document which I hold in my hand?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it is a different matter entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be received, printed as a document, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

[Senate Doc. No. 55, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.]

Memorial to the Senate of the United States, by David Lubin, in behalf of the State granges of California, Oregon, Illinois, Washington, Missouri, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, demanding protection for agricultural staples by a bounty on exports as part of an act for the protection of shipping by subsidies.

THE SUBSIDY SHIPPING BILL AND ITS EVIL INFLUENCES ON AGRICULTURE.

In the Philadelphia Public Ledger, July 31, 1895, we find that almost all the Atlantic coast shipowners and shipbuilders were in convention on this subject at Maritime Hall, Philadelphia, and resolutions were unanimously passed by them which said in substance that agricultural staples, being exports, can not be protected by a tariff on imports, and that American ships in the foreign trade could likewise not be protected by a tariff on imports. That is, a tariff on imports could protect neither of them. But then other things were protected, to wit, manufactures; therefore the "other things" were choking the life out of shipping and agriculture. So they resolved on what? Protection for shipping at the expense of agriculture? Oh, no! For we read how Mr. Charles H. Cramp, their leading man, arose and cried down any such unjust and unpatriotic notion. He said:

"Mr. Chairman, I think that when we went to Congress to argue for a bounty for ourselves we committed a grave error, and I am going to do what I can to repair it. * * * I do think now, since I have thought the matter over, that we made a signal error, and that instead of tacking agriculture onto shipping, we should tack shipping onto agriculture." And what Mr. Cramp then said was unanimously assented to, and resolutions were adopted that the time had come when there should either be absolute and unrestricted free trade or equity in protection; and if we are to have protection, it should not be limited to the "mono" protective system of this country, but the "dual" form in operation in Europe should also be in operation here. These shipping men and protectionists then said that protection by a tariff on imports for manufactures is only tolerable or equitable when offset by a bounty on exports for agriculture, and this is what they voted for.

But Mr. Wilbur F. Wakeman, the secretary of the American Protective Tariff League, and Senator HANNA came along, and no doubt convinced these shipping men that it would not pay shipping men and Republicans nearly so well for them to strike out into the questionable waters of justice and equity as it would to swim along in the placid currents of the "status in quo."

For, reasoned the protection leaders, "To talk export bounty would expose the whole 'snap' of 'protection' to the fool farmers." And so the shipping people came down from the exalted pedestal of equity and justice to the more practical level of personal advantage.

Let us consider that American agriculture has no longer the power of fixing the world's price for the agricultural staples, as formerly. The Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance of the United States for July, 1899, page 229, shows exports of agricultural implements and machinery as follows:

Seven months ending July, 1897	$4,370,217

Besides this, every important manufacturing center in Europe has now "plants" for the manufacture of reapers, mowers, binders, harvesters, and gang plows for the cheapest land and labor countries of the world, all in competition with the American producer. And this means that this country is no longer the price-fixing base for our primary industry; that these agricultural machines are almost all for the cheapest land and labor countries of the world; that they are now used in direct competition with our primary industry; that the cheapest land and labor countries of the world now fix the prices for agricultural staples. And if we at this time, in addition, employ vicious legislation which would set home robbers at the throat of our primary industry, such legislation would be rank treason against our Republic; for it would more surely tend to destroy it than the more manly bullets of an open enemy.

The time is now at hand when, if we are to have protection at all, let it be "dual" and not "mono." If we are to have protection by a tariff on imports for manufactures, we must also have protection for agricultural staples by a bounty on exports. One alone is inequity, which inequity can only be overcome by the "dual" system or else by absolute and unrestricted free trade.

And in spirit and substance all this was unanimously assented to at the Philadelphia convention by the very same shipping people who are now so clamorous and vehement in denying what they then said, as will be seen by referring to the Philadelphia papers of July 31, 1895.

But whatever be the stand or the claims of the shipping people, it remains for them to show why the ship-subsidy bill now before Congress is not the most vicious and most dangerous political economic measure ever presented for national legislation! Under the pretext of upbuilding the American merchant marine there is to be created the possibility of a trust so powerful in the magnitude of unjust money grabbing as to sink into insignificance all other attempts in the same direction, but with this difference: While other trust devices, designed for the purpose of unjust toll, gather this toll from all the people, the hidden purpose of the ship-subsidy bill is to confine the robbery to the American farmer.

And what will be the extent of this robbery? First of all there is to be the subsidy of $9,000,000 a year from the United States Treasury, almost all of it contributed indirectly by the unprotected American producers of agricultural staples. How so? Because it is the law in economics that the unprotected pay for the protection of the protected. Now, agricultural staples, being exports, can not be protected by a tariff on imports. Being unprotected, the staples of agriculture necessarily pay for the protection of the protected. Therefore, the unprotected producers of agricultural staples indirectly contribute to the United States Treasury, through the operation of the protective system, the $9,000,000 a year which the shipping people ask should be given them as subsidy.

But this $9,000,000 of the American farmers' money which is demanded is not by any means the end of the contemplated robbery, but is only the small end of the beginning. This is only to serve as the fire, the frying pan, and the fat, and hidden behind Senator FRYE'S measure is the object to be fried, and that object is nothing less than the American farmer himself. Pass this shipping-subsidy bill and drive away the free and unimpeded competition of the world's shipping and what will happen? This: That through this shipping-subsidy device the shipping people will be able to pocket ten, twenty, or fifty times more money than the nine millions a year subsidy. For such a measure will make possible a combination which will give the shipping people of this country the power to raise and lower the cost of freight at will, and this can net them hundreds of millions of dollars a year through the power they will have in "bulling" and in "bearing" the prices in the wheat pit, in the cotton exchange, and in manipulating the prices of hops, tobacco, meat products, and the other staples of agriculture. Out of whose pockets will these hundreds of millions be taken? Out of the pockets of the American farmer.

Now, to determine the truth of what has here been said it is deemed in order to ask the shipping people what they want the nine million dollar a year subsidy for?

Is it just a simple present from the Government—a sort of "quid pro quo" to even up the shipping men for the cost of the protective system?

Or is this nine million dollar a year subsidy for the purpose of doing away with the competition of foreign ships and for the upbuilding of a merchant marine?

If the shipping men answer that the subsidy is for the former purpose, the question remains, Why should not the staples of agriculture likewise receive a yearly subsidy, since the latter, being exports, can no more be protected by a tariff on imports than can ships in the foreign trade be protected that way? Especially anxious should the shipping men be to have it so, since they are on record as having pledged themselves in open meeting that they would accept no protection which would not embody in the same act equally effective protection for agricultural staples.

Should they, however, claim that the purpose of the subsidy is for the latter purpose—that of driving away of foreign competition in ocean freight rates—the question then remains, What will they do with these freight rates after they have driven away foreign competition?

Will they lower the rates below what they have been on an average between the years 1887 and 1897? If they will guarantee to do that and agree to keep it up for twenty years, then in that event and under undoubted guarantee of good faith it would be a good economic move to have this done.

But if there are any chances for a raise in the rates of ocean freight, then in that event it would be a great economic blunder and a great national crime to give these shipping people an opportunity to do this.

For a raise of freights on export manufactures causes only the direct loss of the specified advance on any one shipment; whereas in ocean freights on agricultural staples the case is decidedly different.

Here the rise of a cent in ocean freights means a decline of a cent on all the staples of agriculture, sold or unsold, exported or for home use.

What madness would it not be for a country which exports agricultural staples to shut off the very cheapest ocean freight rates which the world can give?

Once give the shipping men the power to raise and lower ocean freight rates at will and they will have more power than all the other trusts put together. It would then enable the shipping people to go into the wheat pits and cotton exchanges and skin the American farmers as they have never been skinned before, for such a syndicate would then be able to "bear" and "bull" the market at pleasure.

And can this be denied? Let any president or secretary of a wheat pit or cotton exchange be asked what can be done by a combination which has the power of fixing ocean freight charges at will, and if he is willing to tell the truth he will say that such a combination would soon absorb to itself the greater part of the wealth of this nation.

The nine-million-dollar subsidy is therefore not the end, but the mere beginning. Once in full swing and the entire amount of the subsidy could profitably be paid away to bosses and lobbyists in order to keep the law on the statute books, so as to enable the syndicate to manipulate the wheat pits and cotton exchanges for the purpose of the unparalleled exploitation of the farmers of the nation.

Can statesmen conscientiously and honestly work for a measure like this?

If we must have protection, let it be just. So long as it is by a tariff on imports for manufactures, it should also be by a bounty on exports for the staples of agriculture, when a small part of the export bounty could be paid to American ships only when carrying these staples. This would avoid the danger before pointed out. If it is not deemed just to protect the staples of agriculture by a bounty on exports then neither is it just to protect manufactures by a tariff on imports.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present the memorial of Henry McCoy, making certain statements relative to his claim now before the State Department for money claimed by him out of the award in the hands of the State Department in the matter of the Delagoa Bay Railroad. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of 27 citizens of Jasper, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcel-post bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. McMILLAN presented petitions of the Missionary Circle of the First Presbyterian Church of Tecumseh; of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church, of Ishpeming; of the Agency for the Protection of Women and Children of Detroit, and of sundry citizens of South Lyons and Lexington, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FOSTER presented a petition of the Association of Pioneers of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the First Congregational Church, of Centralia, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Africa; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry druggists of Seattle, Wash., praying for the repeal of the revenue tax on proprietary medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of sundry manufacturing firms of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the repeal of the duty on hides; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Phil Kearny Post, No. 7, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muskegon, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference to veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURLEY presented the petition of M. H. Clark & Bro. and 98 other members of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Clarksville, Tenn., and of sundry other citizens of Montgomery County, Tenn., praying that an appropriation be made to provide for a soil survey of the Clarksville tobacco district; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the repeal of the duty on hides; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of the Society of the Colonial Dames of America, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase of Temple Farm, at Yorktown, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's League of Alexandria, Va., praying that an appropriation be made for a survey of the Potomac River near that city for the purpose of dredging the channel of Hunting Creek; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Society of Friends of Loudoun County, Va., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of George Carr Round, of Manassas, Va., praying that the Government acquire title to the land upon which the monuments commemorative of the battle of Manassas are erected; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry keepers and surfmen of Smiths Island, Virginia, and a petition of sundry keepers and surfmen of Cobbs Island, Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend sections 7 and 8 of an act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck;" which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I present certain papers relating to the improvement of the city of Washington, and move that they be printed as a document and that 500 copies be bound in paper and printed for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI HOME GUARDS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to me from the Record and Pension Office in regard to the proceedings of the Hawkins Taylor commission may be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

BATES'S PAPER ON SHIPPING.

Mr. TELLER. I have an historical statement headed "Our shipping impotency: the story of British endeavor to paralyze our power at sea," prepared by William W. Bates, N. A., which I believe to be of sufficient importance to have printed as a document for the use of the Senate, so that Senators may have the benefit of the information it contains in the discussion of the subsidy bill. It contains a good deal of data. I therefore ask that the paper be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado that the paper referred to by him may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3794) to provide for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande River between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3089) granting an increase of pension to Kate M. Pond; and

A bill (H. R. 269) granting a pension to Rosa G. Thompson, formerly Rosa G. Edwards.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 715) granting a pension to Fidillar White, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4341) to provide for the refundment of certain moneys to the Republic of Mexico, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5061) to provide for the refundment of certain moneys to the Republic of Mexico, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN on the 11th instant, proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Librarian to keep open the Library of Congress from 2 until 10 o'clock p. m. on Sundays, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 101) authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that there be printed the usual number of copies of A Digest of the International Law of the United States, taken from the opinions of Presidents and Secretaries of States, and of Attorney-Generals, and from the Decisions of Federal Courts, and of Joint International Commissions in which the United States was a party; and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 2,000 copies for the use of the State Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the digest to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be brought down to date.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE L. POTTER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred Senate resolution 436, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire reports a resolution for which he asks immediate consideration. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. NELSON December 15, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Jennie L. Potter, widow of George F. Potter, deceased, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was, in line 3, after the name "George F. Potter," to strike out "deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 to obtain a launch for the customs service in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MONTANA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer a privileged resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire presents a resolution, for which he asks immediate consideration, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be discharged from further consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers in connection with the inquiry concerning the appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senators from the State of Montana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

CUBAN FUNDS.

Mr. BACON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of Abraham L. Lawshé, giving in detail the result of his investigations, made under the direction of the War Department, into the receipts and expenditures of the Cuban funds.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico 2,000 copies of public act No. 69, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900; also, 2,000 copies of public resolution No. 23, being a joint resolution to provide for the administration of civil affairs in Porto Rico pending the appointment and qualification of the civil officers provided for in the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

WATER FILTRATION.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the relative advantages of the so-called mechanical system and of the slow sand system of water filtration for cities; and the necessary expenses of such investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

CLAIM OF HENRY M'COY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, directed to examine the claim of Henry McCoy and to report to the Senate whether the Secretary of State should be directed to pay the sum of money claimed by him out of the award in the hands of the State Department in the matter of the Delagoa Bay Railroad.

PENSIONS TO PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the bill (S. 5055) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors confined in so-called Confederate prisons be printed for use of the Senate.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1901, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12447) to amend an act approved June 1, A. D. 1900, entitled "An act to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SEIZURE OF PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to give notice that on Friday morning next, directly after the routine business, I shall ask the Senate to take up Order of Business No. 18, being the bill (S. 602) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Secretary will state the first unobjected pension bill on the Calendar.

GEORGE T. HAMILTON.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to me for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 986) for the relief of George T. Hamilton.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not sure that under a unanimous-consent agreement I can consent to the Senator's request, but unless some other Senator objects and the bill leads to debate I shall yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. KENNEY. It will only take a moment. If there is any debate on the bill, I will withdraw it and not ask for its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. It will be read to the Senate in full for its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 986) for the relief of George T. Hamilton.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. KENNEY. There is a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri call for the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a new principle which is proposed to be adopted, and I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. KENNEY. There is a report on the bill, made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. TALIAFERRO June 2, 1900:

The Committee on Claims, to whom has been referred the bill (S. 986) for the relief of George T. Hamilton, respectfully report as follows:

George T. Hamilton, of Stanton, Del., seeks to have paid to him the sum of $5,000 for injuries sustained by him at the hands of United States soldiers in the year A. D. 1863.

The facts set forth in the petition of said Hamilton and shown by the affidavits filed in the case are as follows:

George T. Hamilton, then a boy of about 16 years of age, was standing inside his mother's house, located about 100 yards south of Stanton station, on the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad, when he was shot through both thighs, almost midway between the hip and knee. The shot was fired by one of a number of United States soldiers who were at that time on a train on the side track at Stanton station on their way South.

No permanent injury seems to have resulted from the wound in the left leg, but in the right thigh the ball came in contact with the main nerve, clipping some of the fibers, the doctor states, and permanently injuring the nutrition of the lower limb, following which there has been a continuous series of ulcerations, caused by such lack of nutrition, the result of the wound before mentioned. He is permanently disabled from the effects of this wound, and has been prevented from following such occupations as would in health enable him to make a living, and this disability, the doctors who have attended him say, is increasing with years, and there is no probability that he will ever recover or be able to do much work. He was unable to work for a year after the shooting, and in 1885 he was in bed for fifteen weeks, the leg swelling and discharging in a dozen places, and since that time he has not been able to do much work on account of said wound, the leg swelling and discharging at frequent intervals, causing him much suffering, and at times his life has been despaired of.

George T. Hamilton is a man of about 53 years of age, is married, and has eight children, the eldest of whom is about 24 years of age and the youngest about 6 years.

George T. Hamilton was a track hand on the railroad at the time he was shot, and from the testimony appears to have been all his life a sober and industrious man. He has no means of support beyond his own exertions.

An examination by your committee of the claimant disclosed the marks of a wound between the knee and hip on the right leg of the claimant, it being very perceptible, especially when the limb was drawn up and then extended, showing injury to the main nerve of the leg. The leg between the ankle and knee was found to be much swollen and a large scar near the ankle joint indicated that there had been a severe discharge or discharges or ulcerations at that point. The leg, from the ankle to the knee, had an unnatural appearance, indicating a failure of vitality, and the flesh looked lifeless and unhealthy from the wound to the ankle.

In further explanation of the condition of the claimant your committee attach hereto copies of the affidavits of the attending physicians, which they ask may be taken as a part of their report.

Your committee recommend the adoption and passage of the aforesaid bill.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, City and County of Philadelphia, ss:

On this 23d day of February, A. D. 1892, personally came before me, William F. Boyd, a notary public for the county and State aforesaid, George W. Hudders, M. D., who, being by me first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: I reside at No. 2033 North Eighth street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. I am a practicing physician in said city, and have been for the last fifteen years. I formerly resided in the village of Christiana, in the county of Newcastle and State of Delaware, and practiced medicine there and in the adjoining neighborhood.

I knew George T. Hamilton, of Stanton, in the State of Delaware, in the year 1863. I think it was early in the spring of that year I was called in to attend him for wounds received from a United States soldier who fired from a train at Stanton station, or such was the information I received from the family and others in regard to the matter. I found that Hamilton had been shot, the bullet passing through both his thighs about midway of the femur or thigh bone, and passing posterior of the femur, barely escaped striking the bones of both thighs; I attended Hamilton until he was able to get about again; I can not at this time recollect just how long. Hamilton was a boy at the time I attended him for the above-mentioned wounds of probably some 16 years. The wounds from which I found Hamilton suffering when called upon to attend him were what we term gunshot wounds, and I would say had been caused by a rifle ball. On the day on which George T. Hamilton was shot there was a good deal of firing done by soldiers from passing trains at Stanton.

G. W. HUDDERS.

STATE OF DELAWARE, Newcastle County, ss:

On this 5th day of May, A. D. 1898, before me, J. Perkins Groome, notary public for the county and State aforesaid, personally came Francis L. Springer, M. D., who, being by me first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: I am a practicing physician and reside at Newport, in the county and State aforesaid; from the year 1877 until one year ago, when I moved to Newport, Del., I resided and practiced medicine at Christiana, Del.; I have known George T. Hamilton, of Stanton, Del., since the year 1878, and have attended him at different times since then until about one year ago. In the year 1885 I attended him for three months; during that time he was confined to his bed and suffered a great deal. His trouble comes from the right leg, which swells, breaks out, and discharges at certain periods. It breaks out between the ankle and knee and gives him much pain, and is the result of an old injury to the leg.

I have been told by Hamilton and others that he was shot through both legs, above the knee, by soldiers of the United States Army, about the year 1863, and I should say that the trouble for which I have attended him comes from such an injury. Since I attended him in 1885 he has been able to work very little, not one-third of the time. He is a sober and industrious man and works whenever he is able. I have no expectation that his leg will ever be well or that he will be able to work much more. Hamilton's condition has been worse of late years. I do not believe that he is able to work two weeks out of the year at this time, and for the last four or five years he has been able to do but little work, on account of this wound. I have understood that Dr. George F. Hudders, late of Philadelphia, deceased, who formerly lived at Christiana, practiced medicine there, attended Mr. Hamilton at the time he was shot.

FRANCIS L. SPRINGER, M. D.

Sworn and subscribed to before me the day and year first above written.

On this 29th day of April, A. D. 1898, before me, Edward T. Price, notary public for the State of Delaware, personally comes Horace Bradley, who, being by me first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: My name is Horace Bradley; my age is about fifty-four years; I am a physician, practicing medicine at Marshallton, Del.; I have resided at Marshallton for about four years; I was graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in March, 1865; previous to that time I had been a medical cadet in the United States Army, serving at McKim's Hospital, Baltimore, Md., and at Chattanooga, Tenn. After graduation I was assistant surgeon in the United States Army and was surgeon in charge at Geer Hospital, at Wilmington, N. C., and afterwards assistant medical director of the Department of North Carolina until July, 1865, after the close of the war.

I have attended George T. Hamilton, of Stanton, Del., as his physician for about one year. I find him suffering from the effects of a gunshot wound, the shot said to have been fired by soldiers moving through the State of Delaware under orders from the United States. The ball passed through both thighs almost midway between the hip and knee. In the right thigh it came in contact with the main nerve, clipping some of the fibers, thus permanently injuring the nutrition of the lower limb, following which there has been a continuous series of ulcerations, caused by such lack of nutrition, a direct result of the gunshot wound before spoken of. He is permanently disabled from the effects of this wound, and has been prevented from following such occupations as would in health have enabled him to make a living, and this disability will continue during his life.

I have examined the wound and find marks which were in all probability made by a bullet, as claimed by himself and others. There have been frequent ulcerations of the right leg, caused by the defective nutrition of the part heretofore spoken of, the last ulceration occurring within six months of this time and now just healed up, but in all probability other ulcerations will continue to follow each other successively from the same cause so long as he lives.

HORACE BRADLEY.

Sworn and subscribed to before me the day and year aforesaid.
EDWARD T. PRICE, Notary Public.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have listened to the reading of the report, though I am not sure I heard every sentence of it. If I did, it contains a statement of the physician of the beneficiary of this bill, but it does not contain a statement of the principle or rule under which the United States is expected to make compensation in such cases. I should be glad to have stated what were the circumstances of the firing, whether its consequence was by mere accident or whether it was the result of an error of some officer in the discharge of his duty, for which, I believe, the Government has never admitted its responsibility.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. President, I agreed to withdraw the bill if it provoked debate, but, with the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], if he will pardon me, I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that Mr. Hamilton was injured by the firing of a certain Massachusetts regiment which was going to the front in 1863 and had been siletracked at a place called Stanton Station, between Wilmington and Newark, in the State of Delaware. These men seemed to be without the control of their officers. They spent some hours in firing from the windows of the cars, and the result of that shooting was the injury to this man, which has made him a cripple for life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I still do not see on what principle the Government is to undertake responsibility in such cases. If the careless or wanton acts of soldiers during a war be a reason for compensation from the Government, I suppose there must be millions upon millions of such claims in the Southern States. When I was upon the Committee on Claims of this body, not so long after the war, the principles were very well settled on which we would proceed, and we certainly must have denied a very large number of applicants whose cases stood on precisely the same principle as this one. It is very hard even to suggest a delay when a person in the miserable plight described is the object of the bill, but I think it had better stand over until to-morrow. The Senator from Delaware can then call it up again.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. KENNEY. I desire to say that I do not believe the Government of the United States desires to avoid responsibility in a case of this kind any more than a corporation or an individual could avoid it. There can be no question that if this injury had resulted from the negligence of a corporation or an individual the claimant would have been enabled to recover in any court of the State of Delaware or elsewhere. I hope the Senator will not object to the present consideration of the bill. I think it is a most just measure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is a new doctrine to say that any government is responsible for the results of the carelessness of its soldiery in war. A corporation is lawfully responsible ordinarily for the negligence of its officers. That doctrine would impose upon this Government the payment of millions and perhaps hundreds of millions; it would bring an enormous responsibility. I object for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill resumes its place on the Calendar without prejudice. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

BETSEY L. WOODMAN.

The bill (S. 5015) granting a pension to Betsey L. Woodman was announced as first in order, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Betsey L. Woodman, widow of Daniel C. Woodman, late first lieutenant Company A, Thirteenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROL C. KRAYENBUHL.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a bill on the Calendar previous to the one just considered. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3851) granting a pension to Mrs. M. G. Krayenbuhl.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carol C. Krayenbuhl, widow of Maurice G. Krayenbuhl, late captain and commissary of subsistence, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Maurice G. Krayenbuhl until they reach the age of 16 years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was that bill passed over and left on the Calendar?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was passed over when the pension bills were last under consideration so that I might prepare a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Carol C. Krayenbuhl."

GEORGE H. SHAPLEY.

The bill (S. 5017) granting a pension to George H. Shapley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George H. Shapley, late unassigned Eighteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHEBE E. BABCOCK.

The bill (S. 4836) granting an increase of pension to Phebe Babcock was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phebe E. Babcock, widow of William J. Babcock, late of Companies E and B, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Carrie E. Babcock, invalid and dependent child of said William J. Babcock, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Phebe E. Babcock."

GEORGE A. PARKER.

The bill (S. 4841) granting an increase of pension to George A. Parker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George A. Parker, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIDEON W. T. RIDLON.

WILLIAM H. GARDNER.

The bill (S. 2785) granting a pension to William H. Gardner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Gardner, late second lieutenant Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William H. Gardner."

CHARLES SCOTT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5144) granting an increase of pension to Charles Scott, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles Scott, late lieutenant-colonel Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY R. PIKE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5235) granting a pension to Mary R. Pike, to report it with amendments; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments in line 6, after the word "Sixteenth," to insert "Regiment;" in line 7, after the words "New Hampshire," to insert "Volunteers," and in the same line to strike out the word "Volunteers;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary R. Pike, widow of James Pike, late colonel, Sixteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIZZIE BARRETT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5033) granting a pension to Lizzie Barrett, to report it favorably with an amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lizzie Barrett, widow of Michael Barrett, alias Michael Lynch, late of Company G, Sixty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Michael Barrett, alias Michael Lynch, until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12838) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, to report it with two amendments. It is important that the bill should be considered now, in order that it may get back to the other House and be acted upon before the holiday adjournment. So I ask that it may be taken up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maine for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 7, on page 1, to insert the following:

SENATE.

For folding speeches and pamphlets at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $1,000.

The next amendment was, after line 21, on page 4, to insert the following:

Naval Observatory: Observation of total eclipse of the sun in May, 1901: For the preparation and outfit of instruments and their transportation, the purchase of additional apparatus and material, including photographic material, the erection of suitable buildings at each station, and generally the expenses of preparation and observation, including the living expenses of parties at the several stations, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 20, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1900.

The recess having expired, the House (at 11 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, December 19) resumed its session.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANHAM, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one day, on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2703) granting a pension to Mary M. F. Flagler; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

GRADE CROSSINGS, ETC., BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COWHERD. Allow me to say that we who are opposed to this measure do not wish to offer any factious opposition to it. But we do say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] and other members supporting the bill that we shall insist upon fair treatment in regard to the measure. We shall insist upon our right to offer substantive amendments affecting the bill and, as we think, perfecting it; and we want to be heard reasonably in the discussion of these propositions. The gentleman from Wisconsin knows that there is no quorum here at the present time to vote upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. We do not want to raise that point; but we do insist that the gentleman should agree that we shall receive fair treatment in the consideration of this bill, and that he will not attempt to suppress discussion upon substantial amendments which may be presented.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to say that the committee wanted full and fair discussion of this measure. We had abundance of time yesterday. There was no reason on earth why the proposition should not have been discussed. And we have no idea now of limiting discussion on any amendments which may be offered in good faith. But, Mr. Speaker, when dilatory tactics are pursued and amendments offered and discussion engaged in simply to consume time, we must insist upon the House proceeding in an orderly way.

Mr. COWHERD. On that point allow me to say that no member on this side that took the floor yesterday consumed more than half of the time which he was allowed under the rules. The only request of the minority was that the last twenty-five minutes should be given to other gentlemen that had expressed a desire to be heard in opposition to the measure. If the gentleman says that to-day there is to be no opposition to the offering of substantive amendments or to reasonable debate upon them, I shall make no opposition to his motion.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Missouri any proposition or suggestion to submit? The Chair always thinks it proper to indulge gentlemen in reaching an understanding.

Mr. COWHERD. I will state my proposition. I have prepared several substantive amendments looking to the removal of the railroad station from the Mall and regulating the occupation of other public property. These I want to present to the House; and

I want reasonable time to discuss them. If the gentleman says that such opportunity is to be allowed us, I propose to make no opposition to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BABCOCK. Possibly we can agree on the time for discussion and for taking a vote.

Mr. COWHERD. We can not do that now very well, because the bill contains 16 or 17 sections. I would not like to agree to the gentleman's suggestion now. I have here five or six amendments, some four of them pertaining practically to the same thing—the removal of the railroad station from the Mall.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And I have two amendments which I would like to offer in the same direction—amendments intended simply to preserve the attractive appearance of the Mall.

Mr. BABCOCK. There will be no attempt to cut off amendments which may be offered in good faith. Of that I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not wish to interfere in this matter improperly; but if I may be indulged a moment, I would like to call attention to the fact that there have been no amendments offered to the bill on this side of the House. The delay which has occurred, as I remember, was upon amendments offered by the committee themselves. No unimportant or trivial amendments have been offered by us, and none offered for mere delay.

Mr. PAYNE. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that the amendments of the committee so far as considered yesterday seemed to be of a formal character——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But they were not our amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. And there was no discussion upon those propositions; nothing was said upon them on one side or the other.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think we can get along this morning if we proceed in the ordinary way.

Mr. GAINES. During my absence from the Hall a few minutes yesterday at my usual lunch down stairs, pleasantly enough, with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. POLK], himself a Tennessean, and a mutual friend, a Tennessee lady, a member of the Hermitage Association, I see from the RECORD of yesterday, certain statements were made that reflect upon my people, and I want to be heard a few moments in reply. I do not want to be captious about the pending bill, which I so much oppose, and I have not been, and I will not insist, as I have a right to do, to make technical but fatal objections to proceeding with business, but I am willing for the business to proceed if I am permitted to address the House upon this other matter that touches me more deeply than I ever was before in this House, and more so than this bill does or ever could. I have faced and propose to continue to face the grave issues which the pending measure raises, but I demand that I be given at least five or seven minutes that I may properly allude to what I consider an uncalled-for criticism and reflection upon the people of Tennessee, my neighbors and friends, our beautiful and patriotic women, loving and loyal men.

Mr. BABCOCK. Why, Mr. Chairman, several hours of time were consumed on yesterday by useless and dilatory roll calls.

Mr. COWHERD. Because the gentleman would not allow us thirty minutes, as we requested.

Mr. BABCOCK. But there is no desire to cut off any reasonable and proper debate on any amendment to the bill. If the bill is wrong in any particular it ought to be amended, and no one would support such amendment with more alacrity than the committee which reports it if it is shown to need such amendment. But other matters are pressing upon the House, and we are anxious to bring this to a vote at a reasonable and proper time. That is all the committee asks and all they have sought to accomplish. Now, if the gentleman has any suggestion to make about a vote or the time for a vote I should be very glad to hear him.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman had shown that disposition on yesterday there would have been none of the delay of which he speaks.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1929, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read section 2 of the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that debate was closed on the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that debate was closed by unanimous consent, although the section is still open to amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. I want an amendment read in connection with the section. I do not care to discuss it now, for I prefer to discuss it in connection with the next section or the succeeding one.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 15, amend by inserting the word "to" between the words "and B street," and strike out after the word "to" "and upon that portion of the Mall hereinafter described."

Also in line 19, between the words "and B street," insert the word "to," and in said line, after the word "southwest," strike out "to and upon said portion of said Mall."

In line 22 strike out the word "are" and insert "may be."

Mr. COWHERD. I will simply say, Mr. Chairman, that this is the adjustment of this portion of the bill to the amendment I desire to offer to section 2, which is designed to eliminate the occupation of the Mall and put the depot at the point which I indicated on the map on yesterday.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that debate is only proceeding by unanimous consent on this section.

Mr. GAINES. On yesterday, while I was at lunch at the usual lunch hour, there occurred a colloquy upon the floor of the House——

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I wish to say that debate has closed upon this section, and if he will wait until we get to the next section I will offer no objection to his occupying the floor.

Mr. GAINES. Very well.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the four amendments I shall offer at the proper place be considered as pending until we reach the portion of the bill on page 4 which provides for the occupation of the Mall, at which place I wish to offer an amendment in lieu of that section, and will ask a vote on it at that time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not see any objection to that request.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as pending until we reach section 3 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment he offers be considered as pending until section 3 is reached.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand the gentleman refers to three additional amendments not yet offered and which have not been read.

Mr. COWHERD. It is a fact that the three amendments relate only to the one particular provision of the bill. But I refer especially to the amendment striking out section 3 and inserting the amendment in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman's request relates only to the amendments which have been read.

Mr. COWHERD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that he was in error in supposing that all the committee amendments had been agreed to. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment which the Clerk will report, which is a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "for," insert "not less than," and after the word "two" insert "nor more than four."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, was not this amendment agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed it was, but it was not. It was ruled upon, but not voted upon. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATION BUILDING.

SEC. 3. That in order to accommodate the increasing passenger, mail, express, and other traffic in the city of Washington the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall have and be possessed of the right, which is hereby granted and conferred, to occupy and use, on the conditions hereinafter mentioned, that portion of the Mall lying between B street SW. and B street NW. as the southerly line of said B street NW. is hereinafter defined, and between the west line of Sixth street and a line drawn parallel therewith and 340 feet west thereof, and to erect and maintain thereon a station building and appurtenances, train sheds, and tracks and sidings in connection therewith suitable and adequate for the convenient accommodation of said traffic; and the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall, in connection with its occupation and use of the portion of the Mall hereby granted, locate, construct, and maintain beneath its tracks and structures on the line of West Capitol street, as shown on the city maps, a substantial arch or arches not less than 200 feet in width, as a public passageway for vehicular and pedestrian traffic (as shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia), which shall be so constructed as to afford roadways and sidewalks; and the said company shall also pave the said passageways at the time of their construction to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, but thereafter the maintenance of the pavement and roadways shall devolve upon the said District of Columbia.

Mr. COWHERD. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 4 and 5 strike out section 3, inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove its tracks running north and south on Sixth street west and remove its depot and passenger station now located on the public reservation at Sixth street and B street NW., in said city, and in lieu thereof the said company shall, under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District, construct and maintain a station building and appurtenances, train sheds, tracks, and sidings in connection therewith, suitable and adequate for the convenient accommodation of the public, to be located at such point between Sixth and Tenth streets SW., and between B street and D street SW., as may be most convenient to said company, and authority is hereby given to said company to acquire private property for that purpose within the boundaries last described, either by purchase or condemnation, as is hereinafter provided, and to occupy such portion of the public reservation and streets within said boundaries as the Commissioners of the District may deem necessary for the purpose herein set forth.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will bear with me a moment, this amendment is offered in lieu of section 3, for the purpose of bringing definitely before the Committee of the Whole the proposition that I attempted to make yesterday, which was that this passenger depot should be moved directly south, to the southernmost edge of the Mall. I have left there a space running from four to five blocks either way, wherein they might locate the depot. This bill, of course, if that amendment should be adopted, would have to go to a conference committee, and in that conference committee, if it should be necessary to locate the depot more definitely, it could easily be agreed upon. I want a vote upon this proposition for the purpose of bringing this matter definitely before the House. I do not know that I can add anything to what I said yesterday in regard to that matter. There are, however, two other things to which I should like to call the attention of the committee at this time, and, if this amendment should be defeated, I should like then to offer them and think they should be put into this bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has suggested that the railroad company intend to build a magnificent depot there. There is nothing whatever in this bill to compel the erection of any particular kind of a depot. If we propose to give this great grant of public property, we certainly should put into the bill a provision that would compel them to erect a depot according to plans prepared by the District Commissioners, or at least that the plans they prepare should receive the approval of the District Commissioners.

One other proposition that should be agreed to is this: I insist that we ought not to give away this Government reservation, but if we do propose to give it away, we certainly should reserve enough hold upon it to compel that road to permit other roads that may hereafter want to enter the city of Washington to have the right to enter that depot over the tracks on that Mall. Otherwise, there will be no reason why another portion of it may not be given away when another road comes along, and still some other road be given the White Lot and another the Monument.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the first proposition embodied in this amendment is the proposition, as definitely as I can state it, compelling the company to abandon the depot they now occupy and remove it and their tracks to the southernmost edge of the Mall. If the proposition is not definite enough, it can be remedied in conference.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand it, this is a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in effect a substitute for the section.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROUT. Has debate been exhausted on this?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. GROUT. I should like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Vermont in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GROUT. I am in opposition to the section and in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In opposition to the substitute?

Mr. GROUT. In favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is first in order.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer the amendment, and I should like to be heard upon it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. LACEY. I should like simply to have it pending.

Insert in line 10, page 5, after the word "Columbia," the following:

"Provided, That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company may acquire, by condemnation and purchase, the lands lying between the present station grounds and Pennsylvania avenue and may construct said station buildings across B street SW., to front on said avenue, and for the purpose of constructing said buildings may erect an arch over B street SW., such arch to be of sufficient height to afford room for vehicles and pedestrians."

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GAINES. Will the Chair recognize "the gentleman from Tennessee" after the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some gentleman in opposition to the substitute, without knowing whether the debate on this will be extended beyond ten minutes or not; therefore the Chair is constrained to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. If I can have the attention of the House, Mr. Chairman, for a moment or two, I want to say in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri that if it is adopted it destroys the entire structure and plan of this bill, and an entire new bill and new scheme would have to be worked out; so that a vote to adopt this amendment would be a vote to defeat the entire proposition. That is sufficient.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, on looking over the RECORD this morning at breakfast I was very much surprised, and I might add grieved, to see this language——

Mr. SHATTUC. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES. A distinguished Republican upon the floor of this House cast a fling——

Mr. SHATTUC. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES. At the tomb of Jackson——

Mr. SHATTUC. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES (continuing). And the noble women that are protecting it.

Mr. SHATTUC. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES. And I desire to reply to——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman from Ohio makes a point of order.

Mr. SHATTUC. It is not in order, as I understand it, to rise to a question of personal privilege in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GAINES. That is not the question. It is always in order to defend Andrew Jackson, Mr. Chairman, if not in a Republican House, it is everywhere else.

Mr. SHATTUC. Now I would like to have a ruling, and then I may withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be constrained to hold that this is not relevant, and a question of personal privilege must be raised in the House.

Mr. SHATTUC. Now I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GAINES. When my colleague [Mr. SIMS]——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I simply state I would like to hear what is the matter with the gentleman, but as a matter of course I shall ask the indulgence of the House for an equal length of time to reply to any remarks he may make; and I do not want to be cut off with any point of order.

Mr. GAINES. I hope the House will grant that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may proceed for five minutes, that he may have five minutes to reply, and that the entire remarks be not subject to the point of order, although not germane. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES. On page 405 of the RECORD I find that when my colleague [Mr. SIMS] was yesterday speaking this colloquy occurred:

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. From an æsthetic standpoint, what is the present condition of the Hermitage?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. If this is to be a special match race, I would like to have order, so we can hear the clash of swords and see the flash, and all enjoy it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, when my colleague [Mr. SIMS] was yesterday speaking against despoiling this park, known as the "Mall," that was laid out by the "Father of His Country," the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] interposed, as follows:

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. From an æsthetic standpoint, what is the present condition of the Hermitage?

Mr. CARMACK. "A thing of beauty and a joy forever." [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may be a joy forever; I think it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I have not seen the Hermitage for twenty years, and therefore I am not in a position to answer the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I wish the gentleman could see it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. But if I never see it I will not vote to erect a railroad depot on it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It would be greatly improved by such a thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman can have the benefit of what he thinks would improve such places. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, at a glance you can see, running all through this colloquy, that the distinguished gentleman has made a claim, incorrectly assuming that the people of Tennessee are not preserving the Hermitage and that therefore its present condition would be adorned with a railroad depot and its accessories. In refutation of this charge, so illy founded, and for the information of the House, I desire to say:

The Hermitage farm, composed of several hundred acres, is owned by the State of Tennessee, a State blessed with citizens who often sent Jackson to represent them in this House and the Senate, who helped to put him in the White House, and who followed him in peace and war with an unfaltering devotion. That the people of Tennessee might better preserve the Hermitage the legislature of my State some years ago granted a charter to the "Ladies' Hermitage Association," composed then, as after its organization under the law, of patriotic women of Tennessee and throughout the United States.

With greatest care this association has gathered from time to time the relics of Jackson, except a few hundred which they are now trying to purchase, and have located them in the old homestead, where Jackson died June 8, 1845. The main building in which he lived for many years before his death, the old log cabin where he had first lived, and the servants' home, it being, too, a log house, are in perfect tact, just as when the old hero died.

The very bed upon which he was fatally ill has not been moved, and the room in which he died is exactly like it was when his brave spirit surrendered for the first time. His humble tomb is saved almost from the touch of time, preserved as it was the day its lid closed over his remains. Not the tomb, sirs, that a few months before his death he refused to accept as a repository for his mortal body, supposed to have contained the remains of the Roman Emperor, Alexander Severus; not a sarcophagus, if you please, prepared for the remains of a king. "His mortal body," he said, "could not rest in a repository prepared for an emperor or a king; my republican feelings and principles forbid it; the simplicity of our system of government forbids it." But, sirs, these fair women are watching over the plain tomb Jackson himself designed and built, wherein he said he would have his mortal remains to rest by the side of those of his devoted wife, and where they do rest, making a hallowed spot respected by all patriotic people, not only in Tennessee, but throughout the world, and to which they go by the thousands every year, with hushed voices, to pay tribute to Jackson's memory.

Upon this farm also we have erected a home for the disabled honorably discharged Confederate soldiers, who are pensioned by the people of my State. The fruits of this farm are used to support these old veterans.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, the people of Tennessee would rebel at the least desecration of the Hermitage. Other loved spots may be swept away to satisfy the greed of the commercialist and the rapacity of mankind, but we will keep with loving care, with pride devoid of pomp, this old place—with increasing love and greater care as years roll on. The Tennessean stood voluntarily by the side of Jackson and died to protect him while he lived. They will still stand by the Hermitage, protecting his tomb and his great name. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is present and has an opportunity to reply to what I have said; and I thank the House for the courtesy of defending against an ungallant fling the beautiful and patriotic women of the State of Tennessee and our sister States who with loving devotion and warm hearts and willing hands are protecting and caring for the home of Andrew Jackson. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, there is no man in this House who honors the name of Jackson more than I do [applause], the old patriotic hero who got ahead of the Constitution when he went to Florida and, with the armies of the United States Government, asserted the right of this nation to govern a colony without any constitution. [Laughter and applause.] Nobody honors the memory of that Sound-Money Democrat [laughter] who laid the foundations deep and strong upon which the Republican financial system of this country is erected. [Laughter and applause.] The old hero and patriot, who swore in his wrath that if anybody undertook to break up this Union he would hang them on the palmetto trees of the South. [Laughter and applause.]

Every man in this House knew that what I said was intended for a little pleasantry at the exuberance and eloquent speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in undertaking to make a comparison in regard to a place that I thought he did not properly describe, and which it turns out he had not seen for twenty years. So I thought I would ask him about the location, the present condition; and everybody understood, and everybody in Tennessee knows that I did it for a little sport. But it has had a good effect. It has let in the gentleman from Tennessee to further establish his reputation as jealously guarding all the interests of his constituents. But I want to point out to him that he has not gone far enough, and I shall have to call on him to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

General Jackson's resting place is not the only "hermitage" in Tennessee. There is a Hermitage Club in the city of Nashville, where I have had the honor to be a guest—an honorable, a rich club—and in it they furnish a beverage branded "Old Hermitage," one of the finest of the old Southern beverages. [Laughter.] Is it possible my friend, speaking in defense of the Hermitage, is going to abandon that staple article? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. I would abandon it before I attacked defenseless women.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, defenseless——

A MEMBER. Grandmothers. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes. Again, there is a great horse, a winner of races and a sire of great colts, named Hermitage. Is he going back on him? [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, the very suggestion of "hermitage" goes back to the days of Jackson and comes down to this time and to the cheer and generous hospitality of the great State of Tennessee and her loyal and gallant sons. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GAINES. I ask the indulgence of the House for three minutes.

Mr. LACEY obtained the floor and said: Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to have the Committee of the Whole come down from the elevation which it has reached in this Jackson discussion long enough to consider the proposition I have presented to the committee. It is a permissive proposition to authorize the railway company to extend its tracks to Pennsylvania avenue by condemning the buildings and grounds lying between B street and the avenue. Whether the company would avail itself of this privilege I am not advised. But certainly if a new station building is to be erected at the point now occupied it would be eminently proper to give authority to extend it to Pennsylvania avenue, in the hope that a splendid building such as that which the company has erected at the Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, may be erected in the city of Washington as an ornament to the avenue. If built on the old site, it will be cut off from view by a row of buildings between the station building and the avenue. Permission at least ought to be given to acquire this additional territory if the building is to be located where it now is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is there anything in the gentleman's amendment or anywhere in the bill which requires this company to make any improvement in the way of a depot building? I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I have not made any examination of the bill in that respect. Of course, this company will build a new depot if it obtains the right to do so. That is the purpose of the bill, as I understand. Assuming that it will do so, and assuming that it will build a depot in harmony with its liberal policy elsewhere, I believe it would erect a building on the Avenue which would be a credit and ornament to the city, and that building ought to extend out to and front upon the Avenue.

I would not care to offer an amendment compelling the construction of a building which shall face the Avenue, because that might involve the obtaining of the additional land at a fictitious price. But if permission merely is given in this bill, that permission would be valuable to the company, and they would probably avail themselves of it and bring the depot out to the Avenue, to which I think it ought to be extended.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, as follows:

Add to the amendment of Mr. LACEY the following:

"Provided, That within five years from January 1, 1901, the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall construct a depot building on the portion of the Mall that it is permitted to occupy under this bill, to cost not less than $2,000,000, on plans which shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this proposition as an amendment to my amendment would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think not.

Mr. LACEY. My amendment gives permission for the acquirement of land through to Pennsylvania avenue, and authorizes the construction of a building on such land. This amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee requires that the building be erected on the Mall.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; on so much of the Mall as it may be permitted to occupy.

Mr. LACEY. I think the language of his amendment is, perhaps, not as the gentleman intended it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wrote the amendment before I heard that of the gentleman from Iowa. Let me, however, say what I desire to say; and I want a vote on this amendment, because I consider it a substantial proposition and a very proper one.

During my long service (if I may refer to it) on the District Committee, this question of abolishing grade crossings in the city of Washington was constantly before that committee and before Congress. This bill does, as I understand, abolish grade crossings, and to that extent it is a proper bill. I want to see passed a measure abolishing grade crossings, not only on the Baltimore and Potomac road, but also on the Baltimore and Ohio road; and to a proper bill for that purpose I would give my hearty support.

Whether in this bill we give the company too much is another question. I think we do. I do not think we ought to give them the 14 acres in the Mall, which this bill in effect gives them in fee. I would favor moving the station back.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken when he says this bill gives the company 14 acres. I have here a calculation of the chief engineer of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in which he says that the part of the Mall that will be occupied according to the proposed plan of an elevated road will be 11.70 acres.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was taking the figures of my friend from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the figures which I gave were those given by Colonel Bingham in an official report to General Wilson on the measure as it appeared in the Senate, proposing to take identically the same piece of land that this bill proposes to take.

Mr. DALZELL. Then there is a difference between the engineers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is correct—and I do not undertake to controvert it, because I do not pretend to have absolutely accurate information—then we propose to give to this company about 12 acres—2 acres less than the number that I named—14 acres. That is more than we ought to give them.

But, Mr. Chairman, if they are to come into the city as near Pennsylvania avenue as the present Baltimore and Potomac depot is located, they ought to be required to construct a building costing not less than $2,000,000 for the privilege which is thus granted to them. If that is done, and the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] are also adopted, the injury to the Mall will not be quite so great, and we will have a beautiful building upon the place where the Baltimore and Potomac depot now stands. And if the people of the District of Columbia see fit to surrender this much property, I shall not object.

I do not believe, however, that it ought to be located there. I am opposed to the location. I think it ought to be farther back—as far back as Maryland avenue. But if we are determined to bring it up to where it is now located, or where the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] would locate it, then we ought to require them to have a building worthy of the location.

Now, there is nothing in the bill requiring this road to construct any depot. They might do it of their own volition. But I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that if they are in earnest in their offer or their proposition to build a depot, I do not see that they can object to any reasonable proposition, such as that I have suggested—a measure the only purpose of which is to require them to do a reasonable thing within a reasonable time. I would not care if you make the time six or seven years; but they should be required within a given time, however remote you may fix it, to erect this building at that point.

Before taking my seat, I would like to amend or modify my amendment by striking out the word "Mall" and let the amendment apply to the property that the railroad company is to occupy under the bill, no matter where it may be located. I do this upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn and the modified amendment substituted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, ever since I have been in Congress I have observed that every time a question of importance comes up, with reference especially to affairs of the District, our friends on the other side of the House always refer to the Washington Post as authority on the subject under discussion, whatever it may be.

Now, in this matter, which is a matter of vast importance, under consideration by the House to-day, I must necessarily trust to the experts who have had the question in hand, and who have given it consideration. I must trust either to the committee that has considered the matter—the committee who makes this report—and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who have investigated the facts, or I must trust the distinguished leader on the Democratic side of the House and that part of his party which seems disposed to follow him. And in view of my present expectation to vote for the pending bill, I wish to say that I do it somewhat on the recommendation of the Washington Post, so often quoted by the Democratic leaders here in the House. I ask, therefore, to have read an editorial from that paper of the issue of to-day, and that it be made a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the article will be read.

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask to have it read in my time. I do not ask consent for its reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The article will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PASS THE RAILROAD BILLS.

Chairman BABCOCK, of the District Committee, in urging the passage of the Pennsylvania Railroad bill by the House, spoke the simple truth when he asserted that 99 out of 100 citizens of Washington are in favor of this measure. He might have gone further and said that the citizens of Washington, with practical unanimity, want all the grade-crossing problems disposed of for good and all. This consummation can be reached by the prompt enactment into law of both the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio bills, and this is what the people of Washington expect at the hands of the House.

Ample consideration has been given to these measures. The Senators and Representatives charged with the responsibility of devising plans to abolish the deadly grade crossings have not lost sight of the city's interests in any respect. They have approved the solutions that are obviously the best obtainable. Washington has suffered enough from the postponement of this necessary railroad legislation. Lives have been sacrificed and the development of whole sections of the city retarded as the result of long delays. Action should not be deferred another day.

The Post, which has persistently advocated the abolishing of grade crossings, commends most heartily the work of Chairman BABCOCK, and is pleased to find that a majority of the House is alive to the importance of the pending measures. After the passage of the Pennsylvania bill it is to be hoped that no time will be lost in disposing of the Baltimore and Ohio measure. The House will do well to ratify the action of the Senate and thus settle the whole vexatious and costly grade-crossing question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHATTUC. I think I have the floor yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not yet exhausted his time.

Mr. SHATTUC. Now, with all of the various amendments offered by gentlemen on the other side, whether they be good, bad, or indifferent, if they shall be adopted it amounts to the deferring of the whole matter to another occasion; it amounts to the reconsideration of it by the Commissioners of the District again, and other officials connected with the matter; it amounts to another report upon it and another consideration in the House, and therefore the delay which must necessarily follow, and for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against every amendment that is offered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to criticise the editorial read by the gentleman from Ohio. I have stated that we believe the grade crossings should be abolished, and that is what this article calls for. That is right. The editorial writer says the people of Washington desire grade crossings abolished, but I do not think it claims that they desire the park reservations to be surrendered, as contemplated in the bill.

To illustrate something of the feeling of the people of Washington, I ask to have read the report of the proceedings of the East Washington Citizens' Association at a meeting held on Tuesday, February 20, 1900. I believe that this association represents practically one-third of the population of the city of Washington, and I think they are opposed to this bill. Here is what the East Washington Citizens' Association says. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

EAST WASHINGTON CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION,
Tuesday, February 20, 1900.

Association met this evening at the usual place, pursuant to adjournment on the 6th instant, with President Smith in the chair, in special session for the consideration only of pending legislation concerning steam railroads. So much of minutes of last meeting were read as pertained to the special business of this meeting.

At call of the chair Mr. H. K. Simpson, chairman of committee on steam railroads, submitted a written report, signed by himself only, stating that the committee had held a meeting, considered the subject, and directed him to prepare a report, but that he had been unable to confer with other members of the committee after it was written. On motion, the report was accepted as from the committee.

The resolutions from the committee on public parks and spaces, pending at close of last meeting of the association, were read by the secretary, and a long and vigorous discussion of the whole subject ensued, in which the participants were Mr. H. K. Simpson, Dr. A. Patten, A. Girouard, Thorwald Solberg, M. I. Weller, B. W. Clark, Gen. N. G. Ordway, Dr. T. W. Staunton, A. F. Sperry, Judge O. B. Hallam, V. Baldwin Johnson, and L. A. Merritt, and W. J. Frizzell, of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association.

The two sets of resolutions before the association were considered separately and together, seriatim, with amendments, and the final result was the adoption as a whole of three resolutions, as follows:

"First. That we are opposed to the diversion of any portion of the public parks of the city for alien purposes, believing that they should be retained in their entirety for the general use and benefit of all the residents of the city.

"Second. We believe that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the proposed bill (S. 929) should be compelled to lay their tracks upon ground acquired by them by purchase; and that instead of the proposed route, as provided for in said bill, they should run parallel to Virginia avenue, thus accomplishing the same purpose as is attained by the present bill and saving the confiscation of public property for corporate use.

"Third. That this association is especially opposed to allowing the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to occupy the surface of that part of Garfield Park east of New Jersey avenue, holding that the tracks of said railroad should be beneath the surface, in a continuation of the proposed tunnel, or an earth-covered archway, to the east side of said avenue, if it should be determined by Congress that the railroad tracks shall run through that space."

Mr. M. I. Weller moved the appointment of a special committee of five, in addition to the president of the association, to lay the subject before the proper committees of Congress, which motion was unanimously adopted; and the Chair appointed Mr. H. K. Simpson, Dr. A. Patten, Mr. M. I. Weller, Mr. Thorwald Solberg, and Mr. J. W. Babson as such committee.

THOS. W. SMITH,
President East Washington Citizens' Association.

Mr. SHATTUC. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, in his time——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If my time is not used up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHATTUC. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that that paper discloses that there were just 19 people at that meeting?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir. It was a meeting of the East Washington Association, which represents one-third of the population of this great city.

The gentleman has seen fit to produce an editorial from the Washington Post. Of course, editorials are all right; but if we are going to try the question upon editorials, I will produce one from the Star a few days ago, opposing this legislation. If we are going to try it by what newspapers say, we will be even on that.

But that is not the proper way to settle the question. What I wanted to show was that the people of the city are not indorsing this proposition.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you dispute the editorial that was published in the Post?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, no; I do not.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the date of that resolution that has just been read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was after this Senate bill was introduced, some time last spring.

Mr. COWHERD. February 20, 1900.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that as chairman of the District Committee I have not heard a word from any of the gentlemen mentioned in this petition at all; but I have something right here that is fresh, and I believe it becomes my duty to submit it along with the petition read by the gentleman from Tennessee. This, Mr. Chairman, is from the Single Tax Club. It is signed by a gentleman by the name of Ramage. I do not know Mr. Ramage, but I suppose he is the Single Tax Club. It is a protest against this bill, and I think it ought to go in with that old matter submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES. Did not the gentleman from Wisconsin state yesterday that there was opposition to this bill by the people of Washington? I so understood him; and the gentleman went on and stated why they opposed it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, I beg your pardon.

Mr. GAINES. I think the RECORD will bear me out. I do not want to dispute the gentleman's word, but I think he is mistaken.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have never made any statement of that kind, excepting that there has been opposition by the Star. That is all I know of.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the annual meeting of the Single Tax Club, of Washington, D. C., held December 18, 1900, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That this club earnestly protests against the grant of public lands and public privileges by Congress to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia, or to any other company. We also protest against the burdensome tax on the people of the District and the nation for the benefit of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, as will be imposed if the pending Senate bill 1929 shall become a law. We therefore protest against the passage of said Senate bill.

"M. H. RAMAGE, Secretary."

Mr. GROUT rose and obtained the floor.

Mr. GAINES. Here is what I had in my mind, if the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen disagree as to what the people of Washington want. Whether or not this proposition is satisfactory to them is not the whole question in this case. Of course, as to grade crossings, it is a large question, because their lives are more imperiled thereby than are the lives of visitors coming from elsewhere; but, as has been frequently said, this is the nation's capital, and the whole people of this country are interested in the disposal of this question.

I heard the reading of that article from the Post just now, introduced here as favoring the bill. I listened carefully, but I did not hear in it a word in favor of one feature of it to which I think many members are honestly opposed; that is, the surrender to this railroad of the public park. I want to say that I am in hearty accord with the general purpose of this bill, viz, to remove grade crossings, and so, I believe, are the citizens of Washington and of the whole country. My objection is to that part of the bill which grants to this railroad company these large privileges on the public park. In the third section it says:

The company shall have and be possessed of the right, which is hereby granted and conferred, to occupy and use—

Now, here is a complete grant in law to occupy and use so long as the railroad company may want to occupy. It is good as long as wood grows and water runs. Heretofore this right of the company to remain on this park has been left by Congress in the shape simply of a revocable license.

Just a word about the history of this occupation. When the charter was granted, the depot was stationed right where the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] proposes now to locate it. This place was satisfactory to the company then. It had the right to come up to Maryland avenue, and no farther. Tom Scott, the president of the road, came here to Washington and sojourned for a time and made the two Houses see that it would be well to let the company come up across the Mall. He represented that they had been at great expense in getting into the city and at great expense in getting through Baltimore with the Pennsylvania connection. It was an expensive road anyway, they claimed.

There was great hostility to the Baltimore and Ohio in Washington at that time because of its illiberal policy, and Congress granted to Tom Scott the privilege of coming up and sitting down on the Mall with his station, but it was looked upon by both Congress and the company as a temporary arrangement merely. That whole section of the city was then an open, unoccupied, tract of land, and the park was wholly unimproved, and among other things a canal passed through it. Since then it has been much improved, drives have been opened up and trees set, but with a steam railroad across it no really satisfactory improvements could be made.

I repeat, this occupation was looked upon as a temporary arrangement, and there was general feeling that all improvements should be delayed till this unsightly obstruction should be removed. It was twenty-eight years ago that the railroad took possession of this park.

Ten years ago, when the act entitled "An act supplementary to an act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia" was passed, it was expressly stipulated in the bill that the privilege to occupy this park was revocable at the pleasure of Congress.

I do not get my eye upon the language making this reservation, but it is in the law passed then, and in every section of it, and there are three sections. Now, in this bill before the House an absolute grant is given to occupy this park, not at the pleasure of Congress, but at the pleasure of the railroad. On the statement of the chairman of the committee in submitting the matter to the House, it is upon an equivalent consideration, because he says ordinarily between municipalities and the railway there is a division of the expense in some ratio for elevating tracks in cities as in this case, and that here the expense of raising the tracks is all incurred by the railroad, and he expressly claims that this is an equivalent for the land granted on the Mall.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to ask if the provision that the gentleman speaks of as being in every clause is not that which reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the bill; and that is in this bill?

Mr. GROUT. The right to repeal the act of ten years ago is in, but there was also an express stipulation that the license to occupy could be revoked by Congress at any time, thus indicating clearly the legislative intention of Congress to grant only a license revocable at will. But in this grant the gentleman will know as a lawyer, as I suppose he is, that a very different right is given; the apt language of the bill is: "The company shall have and be possessed of the right which is hereby granted and conferred to occupy and use." This was written by legal fingers and was clearly intended to convert what was before a revocable license into an irrevocable grant, good so long as the company may want to occupy and use. And especially where the company has incurred the expense of elevating the tracks the courts would then say, "Here is a completed contract presenting a clear case of vested rights."

Mr. MUDD. Have they not vested rights there now?

Mr. GROUT. No; because they are now under a license revocable at the will of Congress; so expressly stated in the license itself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They will get under that grant simply the right to build the railroad station, and can not that right be repealed?

Mr. GROUT. But here is an express right, an absolute grant of this land for the occupation and use of this corporation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But they take that subject to another right, to repeal the law. There is no question about that.

Mr. GROUT. And there is no question that the law will never be repealed. Grant them this right and let the proposed changes follow and it is past recall. The doctrine of vested rights would be invoked, and Congress would never touch it. In fact, if you were to corner the railroad authorities now you will find they will stand now, holding as they do under a revokable license all their vested rights to have the depot remain where it is.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How, then, can we compel them to elevate or lower their tracks?

Mr. GROUT. I say they would, if ordered off, stand on their vested rights now, but I claim they have no right to stay there——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I deny that.

Mr. GROUT. I mean that we now have complete control under these reservations in the statute, reserving authority to order these tracks removed. But if we pass this bill we tie our hands. Congress will have lost absolutely all control except by the drastic remedy of repeal, which no one ever yet knew to be exercised against a live corporation.

Now, a word as to the policy of this legislation, the propriety of it. This reservation for a public park is the principal one in the city. It extends from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol and is susceptible of many beautiful improvements. It was a part of the original plan of the city as laid out by l'Enfant and approved by Washington. It has been cut in two parts by this railroad now for twenty-eight years, during which time it has enjoyed the use of property worth $2,000,000 free of cost; and now you are about giving by this bill the use forever not only of what they have been using, but as much more, simply because this rich corporation has the audacity to ask for it, and you might just about as well give them ground for a station on the Capitol grounds or within the inclosure of the White House if they asked it. Let us be thankful that they have not asked it.

Except in the use of the Mall by this railroad it has been the settled policy, with one or two exceptions, of Congress to keep all the public reservations inviolate. The late Samuel J. Randall while a member of this body made an effort to use some of these reservations for public buildings, but Congress would never consent to it, and since this railroad company has occupied this park the Government has condemned and taken land for the War, State, and Navy building, for the Congressional Library, and for the Post-Office building, at a cost of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. Think of it, and think of what the people of the country will say of us when they are told that we refuse to take the public parks away from the public for Government buildings, but incontinently grant to this railroad the right to run across the principal one in the city and use it for a railway station. Not only this, but a few years ago we paid $1,250,000 for a park in the northern part of the city. Rock Creek Park was not bought for this generation, but for the centuries to come, anticipating, as we thought, a magnificent future development of this capital city of this great and growing Republic. Now, how will this purchase of Rock Creek Park and this grant to the Pennsylvania Railroad for the permanent occupation of the Mall look placed side by side?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Vermont may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, as we have seen, it has been the policy of Congress not to invade the public parks with public buildings. We have been kept off them, have bought property at great cost, and located the public buildings elsewhere. Why, in the name of reason, should we let a corporation sit down with its station permanently in the very heart of the most important park of this city, a park which when this city contains 1,000,000 souls, as it will in two or three hundred years, will be found indispensable for the health and comfort of its inhabitants, saying nothing of how it will look to the critical foreigner or the cultured American citizen who, on visiting the capital, finds a vast railway terminal strung across the boulevard which the Father of his Country thought should extend from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol building?

But they say this grand driveway will be accommodated by an arched passage under it. Think how like a frowning fortress this bulwark built of stone—in plain language, this stone wall—will look built up 10, 12, or 15 feet high, on the top of which will be careering back and forth 50 or 60 and perhaps 100 trains a day. Will this really be an addition to the beauty of this park, as some pretend to think?

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, this unsightly, tumultuous occupation of it will absolutely destroy it for the use for which it was set apart.

Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States own this park—every inch of it. They have a right to the control of it, and I for one hope that Congress will not surrender it. It is not unreasonable for the railroad to go back across the Mall, which is only 1,000 feet—about twice the length of this Capitol building—nor is it unreasonable to ask the citizens to do so. The man who walks to the station will cover this distance in one or two minutes, and the man in the carriage or cab will make it in twenty or thirty seconds. Both the street railways swing around by the proposed site back of the Mall; and why the necessity or sense of giving this railroad the right of sitting down in that park? It is alike unnecessary and unreasonable.

If the station be placed outside the Mall it would save the railroad the expense of this elevated work across the Mall, which would be considerable in amount.

Another thing. There has been much loose talk about the railroad building a fine new station, but there is not a word in the bill which calls upon the road to do this. There ought to be provision for this, and also that other roads should have the right to come in over their tracks; otherwise, under this accommodating spirit of Congress, other powerful railway corporations will be allowed to invade the city at any point and take possession of the balance of this or of other of the public parks of the city.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen that this park was a part of the original design of this city, and it should be sacredly preserved for posterity. We may not see fit to complete this plan in our day and throw up a grand boulevard between Capitol Hill and the White House and otherwise develop and adorn this tract of land reserved for the use of the public, but other generations are to follow, and if this Republic stands half as long as ancient Rome, there are five hundred years yet to make these improvements, and what the American people in that time may want to do with this beautiful city we can not comprehend. I believe, however, that for the present the American people will say that if their representatives are not willing to use the public reservations for public buildings for the Government they should not surrender them or any part of them to private corporations.

Mr. Chairman, I am not hostile to railways. I fully appreciate how much the world is indebted to railways, how much some of us individually—indeed, myself [laughter]—are indebted to them, and I fully appreciate that we can not live without them. They should have reasonable accommodations in every city; they must have reasonable terminals and ought to have them here; but I think, Mr. Chairman, it is not an unreasonable request to ask them to go back across the reservation and plant their station there.

This is not a new question with me. In 1890 I had occasion to take ground upon it in the House, and so it has been with me ever since, and I can not change the views I had then—that the American people will never subscribe to the idea of surrendering that park to this railroad could they understand it. Let it go out through the country that Congress would not take it to put public buildings upon, but stepped out and purchased land at a very high price to build such buildings, and now proposes to give it away to a railroad. I do not think it will be to our credit. I am going to be recorded against it.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. I will vote for that, and then if it is not agreed to I shall feel compelled to vote against the bill, as much as I desire the adoption of its general provisions. It is said that this will upset the whole scheme. It may be necessary to recommit it to the committee, because it would necessarily require a number of changes in the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, the core in the bill is the surrender of this great park to this private corporation; that is the heart of the whole business. And in the name of the American people, not only those now living, but generations unborn, I protest against it. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate be closed on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. It is not, however, my intention to cut off debate upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that debate be now closed on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am reminded of a scene in Henry IV, when Glendower boasts that he can call spirits from the vasty deep, and Hotspur responds: "But will they come, when you do call for them?" [Laughter.] The gentleman from Ohio says if we pass this bill in the shape in which it is now presented that we "reserve the right to repeal" the privileges granted at any time, and that we can at any moment make the Pennsylvania Railroad get off the Mall after we have given them permission to get on it. That is true; we can do it; but will they "get" when they are told to "get?" [Laughter.] And although Congress can do this, will Congress do it?

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] admitted yesterday that we had been trying now a long time, by one means or another, to prevail upon the Pennsylvania Railroad to get off from that part of the Mall which they now occupy as tenants at will of this Government without the slightest right, without ever having paid a dollar, having entered under false pretenses for a temporary occupation, and we have never yet been able to get the Congress of the United States to tell them to remove their tracks. Now, if we require them to erect a $2,000,000 depot——

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman from Mississippi ought to modify that statement and indicate what portion of that sentence the gentleman from Iowa admitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] admitted was that we had tried by various means to get the company off that public ground, and they would not get off. The balance of the statement was my own, and the record and history stand behind me when I make that statement. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, if we require the company to build a $2,000,000 depot, how, in the name of common sense, are we going to "call these spirits from the vasty deep" when we get ready to do so? Why, if such an attempt were made hereafter the company would appeal to the sense of fairness of the Congress of the United States, and they would rightly appeal. They would say: "You yourselves required us to make this $2,000,000 investment, and now are you going to require us to sacrifice it?" And in that event they would be right; they would have strong reason to appeal to you. You have thus far been either unwilling or unable to remove the station and tracks of this company from those public grounds when they had no equities, no rights, upon which to appeal to you. How, then, would you be able to do so under the circumstances which would exist if we pass this bill?

Mr. Chairman, I do not like the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I do not see why we should burden the people interested in the commerce of the Pennsylvania Railroad with the necessity of paying dividends upon $2,000,000 invested in a passenger depot. It seems to me it would be much simpler to exercise the right and the power we now have and require that company to move its station south of the Mall—a location equally convenient for all passenger purposes—and leave them free to erect any sort of a depot they may choose to erect.

For the life of me I do not see how any man in this House can support this bill. For years—ever since I have been a member of Congress—we have been talking, with the flag around our shoulders, about the "Capital of the Nation," with a big "C" and a big "N," and about "beautifying the Capital of the Nation." We have spent millions of dollars to beautify the capital of the nation. We are going to spend millions more. And now it is proposed to give a railroad corporation somewhere between two and three million dollars to "uglify" the national capital—to make it as ugly as the means at their disposal will enable them to make it. I care not how expensive a passenger depot may be erected, no passenger depot ever beautified anything. Its locomotives, with their steam and noise and smoke, do the uglifying; and for this no station building can make atonement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to proceed for five minutes more, if I am not asking too great an indulgence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Mississippi to proceed for five minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if I should bring in a bill here for the purpose of appropriating $1,000 to be paid to the most deserving needy man and the neediest deserving man in the District of Columbia, the man to be selected by a commission to be composed of the President of the United States, the Speaker of the House, and the President of the Senate, I would be denounced, and rightly, all over this country as a State socialist or a communist; and there would not be a vote cast in this House for that bill. Yet we are called upon day after day to give to corporations, that certainly are not needy although they may be deserving, large amounts of money and land.

Such a thing is wrong upon general principles. We ought not to give these people 34 acres of land out of the reservations of the city of Washington. But, Mr. Chairman, my quarrel is not simply with the proposition to give this property away, although giving away public property for any purpose except a public purpose is state socialism and communism—I do not care who receives it, whether it be the needy poor or the Pennsylvania Railroad Company—but I would not even sell this reservation or any part of it. We have the power to-day to do what is right, and we ought to measure up to the responsibilities of the situation. We ought to adopt the amendment which has been offered, or is to be offered, by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] requiring this railroad company to remove its tracks now extending through the Mall, and not requiring them but permitting them to erect a depot south of the Mall at a place indicated on the plans exhibited here yesterday—plans advised by the Secretary of War and Colonel Bingham.

Under those plans what inconvenience would there be to passengers? There would be one car line upon the east and one upon the west of this new passenger depot. People leaving the depot would take one or the other of those street-car lines; and if they desired to transfer to the Pennsylvania avenue line, they would not lose more than a few minutes in the transfer. Yet gentlemen here make a pretense—"a mountain out of a mole hill"—when they talk about the inconvenience resulting to passengers from the removing of the depot. They offer this as a pretext for doing what they really want to do anyhow—to give this road 34 acres of land with the other advantages included in the bill.

The equities between us and this railroad company are plain. We want to do away with these grade crossings. The whole city of Washington wants to do away with them. The city of Washington is right, and we ought to help the citizens to secure this end. But what, in doing it, are the equities between us and this company? We ought to be willing to bear a fair proportionate share of the expense accruing to them from the change; and, so far as I am concerned, I would be willing that we should bear all the expense to accomplish this result, although I think, however, it would be very much fairer for us to bear only one-half, as has been done in most of the great cities in similar cases. We ought not to give this company the public parkage or other public property. All that we ought to do is simply to keep them from suffering by the public improvement. That is all they have a right to demand.

Gentlemen say the alternative is "this bill or nothing." It is not this bill or nothing. It is this bill or something better. You and I have the right and the power to make this bill something better to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he failed to submit to a vote the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. The question now is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. LACEY; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—ayes 47, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the opposition to the bill a proposition with a view of coming, if we can, to some arrangement to close debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like five minutes on that bill.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. And I wish five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. You have just had twenty minutes on that side—ten minutes each. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that we close debate at 1 o'clock. That ought to be liberal time.

Mr. COWHERD. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to closing the debate at 1 o'clock?

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman will not object to my offering the amendments I suggested if this one is defeated?

Mr. BABCOCK. I refer to the proposed amendment changing the depot back of the Mall.

Mr. COWHERD. I have no objection to that.

There being no objection, it was agreed that the debate be limited to 1 o'clock.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is ordinarily very correct in his statement of facts, but he has been misinformed as to the manner in which the occupancy was established or acquisition made by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of the property which the road now traverses on the Mall. His declaration was, in substance, that it was a mere squatter or a trespasser, that it came there without authority, and that it had remained continuously in defiance of authority.

That is not the fact. Its authorization came first from a then competent authority, namely, from a legislative body, the board of aldermen, the council, and mayor of the city of Washington, of the District of Columbia, acting in a proper legislative capacity. That authority was further confirmed the next year by an act of Congress. That act of Congress required the payment of taxes on the franchise they had and on the buildings they erected; and from that time to this they have been paying taxes, and their title has in that manner been authoritatively recognized. So the gentleman will see that he has been misled in this statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did not the Pennsylvania Railroad enter upon the land in question under the pretext of its being a temporary occupation on some great public occasion here?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not answer that question, for I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). And did they not ask to have the privilege of laying two tracks, and promise to shunt their cars and not to cross at all with locomotives?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not say as to that, but I know that the authority has been confirmed over and over again, and I have cited the gentleman to the authority.

Again, the gentleman says that all that is proposed in this bill in the way of benefits to the company is a gift; that we are "giving them" certain privileges and certain property. I deny that. I say that when these great changes are demanded, when we are imposing upon them an expenditure of four and a half millions of dollars, by changing the form of use and changing the location of their road, they have secured in equity the right to compensation in part for that change, and I say that it is the universal practice everywhere to recognize that right.

By statute in the State of New York, where railways are compelled to do what we are now compelling this one to do, the public pay one-half of the cost of the changes; the municipality 25 per cent, the State 25 per cent, the railway company 50 per cent. Nearly every State in this Union has legislated upon this subject, or at least many of them have, and have fixed the proportions that are to be paid by the railway companies making the changes and by the public compelling the changes.

So when we make that compensation that is universal, that the common sense of mankind recognizes as equitable, we are not "giving," but simply paying that which is just. And right here, let me say, how little we do pay! Not 50 per cent, not 35 per cent. The gentleman speaks of a bridge that is to be built "in payment." It is not so. That is an enterprise entirely distinct, but which happens to be provided for in this bill. The duty of the erection of that bridge is imposed by the necessities of the case upon the Congress or upon the District. It is a bridge that will be built. It is a bridge that in another form is being clamored for day after day insistently, that is to cost four and a half million dollars, which this Congress has appropriated $10,000 to secure plans for. If we adopt this legislation, if we pass this bill, if we construct this bridge, in my judgment it will do away with the necessity and the pretext for this other larger, more expensive one that so many gentlemen are insisting upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS rose and was recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like unanimous consent to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended to allow him to ask a question. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish that the gentleman had asked that my time be extended five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand, of course, that the gentleman from Iowa has been granted time in which to answer my question, as well as time for me to ask my question. The question which I wish to ask is this: These cases to which you were referring, where these companies were recompensed for the taking of old sites and all that, were they not always cases where the companies had paid for the old sites?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not tell how the franchise was acquired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They had paid for the right of way and for the terminals and the sites, and in this case they have paid for neither. They are on public property to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. I presume that they are paid for, without regard to the manner in which the franchise or right of way is acquired. It may have been by gift, as we understand it; it may have been by purchase; it may have been by condemnation; but it is entirely indifferent how they acquired it. The statutes of these States are peremptory, as I understand, in compelling compensation, or at least the bearing of a percentage of the cost; 35 per cent in Massachusetts; 45 per cent, I think, in Connecticut; 50 per cent in New York.

Did I understand, Mr. Chairman, that my time was extended five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not. No request was made for that.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I am sorry I was so brief in my answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment presented by the gentleman from Missouri, changing the location of the Baltimore and Potomac station from the Mall to a location south and outside of this Government park, to be acquired by purchase or condemnation, and I shall do so for these reasons: I would like to see the question of the convenience of the location of the station and the beauty and appearance of the Mall harmonized, if possible. If we vote for the amendment presented by the gentleman from Missouri, the bill will then go into conference, leaving the question of the location of the station an open question to be determined in conference, as the two Houses disagree upon that question. That committee will have two months before Congress adjourns in which to deliberate and act upon that matter, and I can not but believe that further deliberation in the light of events subsequent to the passage of this bill in the Senate last year will lead to a wise conclusion.

The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the Senate, Senator MCMILLAN, after the passage of this act in the Senate, I believe, introduced a measure there for the appointment by the President of a landscape architect of eminence to prepare a plan for the improvement of the Mall. Such an architect was appointed in the person of Mr. Parsons, who has recently presented the most beautiful and elaborate plans for this purpose, and I understand that his judgment is against locating this station on the Mall. That plan has not been before either the Senate or House committee in the consideration of this measure. Certainly if that plan can be harmonized with the more convenient location of this station upon Pennsylvania avenue, and if that could be accomplished, I for one would be exceedingly pleased. Yet it seems to me that we are proceeding blindly without the views of this expert. If this station is to go on the Mall or front on Pennsylvania avenue as a matter of convenience to the public, then we should have the views of this gentleman, so that we may place such restrictions and conditions as to the preservation of the landscape effects as will least injure the picturesque appearance of the park. This bill is absolutely without conditions as to this. The railroad company can put a barn there or it can construct an elevated track and station of ornamental or monumental appearance, as it chooses.

Now, if we give this opportunity for conference we are more likely to have a wise judgment upon the matter than if we determine it conclusively now, without the information which since then has been received through the expert employed by the Government. The gentleman who is chairman of the District Committee of the House [Mr. BABCOCK] stated, you will recall, that he knew nothing of the plans of Mr. Parsons. Now, my view is that we should consider the question of the appearance of this park or Mall most carefully; that we should endeavor to harmonize public convenience, so far as accessibility of the station is concerned, with the preservation of the picturesque effect of the park, and this can best be done by a disagreement with the Senate as to the location, which will force conference and deliberation. If we approve the Senate bill in this particular, the whole matter slips out of our hands beyond recall.

If, however, the Senate location is to stand, we should place some conditions in this bill regarding the cost of the building, the plan of the building to be erected, and the general form and design of the elevated car tracks that are to pass over the Mall; for recollect these tracks will pass over this park from the southern extremity to the northern extremity, 1,600 feet, and no restriction is placed on the judgment of the company regarding the character of the structure to be erected.

Now, this is public ground. We are careful about public architecture. We have provided in numerous bills regarding public buildings for competition in the designs, in order to preserve the architectural beauty of this city. Why should we not put a provision in this bill compelling competitive plans, to be approved by skilled men, and fixing a total cost for the structure sufficiently high to insure an imposing structure? The raised tracks could be made under the genius of a skillful architect to assume the appearance of a colonnade or of a series of arches resembling the old Roman aqueducts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask an extension of my time for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. We ought to provide for a landscape architect, so that if this structure is to be designed, it can be designed in harmony with the landscape.

Now, as to the question of cost, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa said that the uniform rule under the legislation of municipalities has been to divide the cost between the public and the corporation with reference to these changes demanded by public improvement. I insist upon it that the legislation of municipalities, usually corrupt, should not be a guide for this body. Let us follow our own precedents, which establish a higher standard than those afforded by State legislatures and city councils in legislation affecting these public uses.

The street railroad companies stand just where this steam railroad does in their occupancy of public streets. Both are enjoying licenses to use, called franchises, which are subject to alteration, amendment, and repeal. Congress, under whip and spur, drove the street railroads in this city from the old system of horse railways into cable railways and electric railways, and compelled those constructing electric railways to adopt the most expensive form of construction—the underground system. Again, Congress compelled the Capital Traction Company—the old Washington and Georgetown Company—to make an extension of its tracks for six blocks in Georgetown, and also compelled it to purchase land and grade it at a cost of $50,000 or $60,000 for a transfer station that cost $300,000.

Did the Congress of the United States provide that railroad with a convenient public reservation? Did it furnish the land, or pay anything toward the cost of improvement? Certainly not. Then when the Metropolitan Railroad was compelled to change from horses to electric power, at a time when the corporation was almost insolvent—it was compelled to put in an underground railway system at great expense, involving millions—did Congress contribute anything to the cost of the change?

No; the change forced the company to buy a whole block of land in the eastern portion of the city for their car station. Was a public reservation given to them? And then when the Rock Creek Railroad Company wanted its franchise enlarged so that it could build from the outskirts of the city to the District line, on the line of Connecticut avenue extended, then not even laid out, what did Congress compel it to do?

Did it give that company land? No; but it compelled it to purchase and turn over to the city the entire street for 3 miles, to grade Connecticut avenue for a distance of 3 miles, not simply the width of the railroad, but the width necessary for traffic on both sides, at a cost of from two hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Congress also compelled it to construct two bridges, one across the Rock Creek and another across the Klingle Ford, not only for the accommodation of the railroad travel, but for general traffic, almost as wide as the streets themselves, at an aggregate cost of over $200,000.

Such is the action that has characterized Congress in dealing with these great public uses, which enjoy the privilege of using the public streets for the transaction of their business. It has never hesitated to compel needed changes which the progress of the times required. It has made the reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal mean something, and has never recognized that a needed change required compensation from the public Treasury. It is a splendid record of uniform regulation and control over public uses, and we do not need the example of corrupt municipalities as our guide.

Now, I contend that in this question of distribution of the cost of this change, there is an unfair imposition on the District, for whilst the gentlemen on the other side insist that they do not grant the fee in this land, you will observe, in their report, that in apportioning the cost for the District they put the land in the Mall at the price of $2.50 per square foot, a total of over $1,000,000. Add to that about $250,000 and make that the contribution for the District in the proposed improvement. They add to that, also, the 60 cents a foot given for Garfield Park—$162,000 cash—so that I say that this is not a fair charge against the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] brings us a choice between two propositions. The one will permit the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to pass over that portion of the public grounds called the Mall, as it does now, and permit it to locate its depot where it is now located, very near Pennsylvania avenue; the other will force its removal to the other side of the Mall and compel the public to pass through the park, a distance of several blocks, to reach it. The question has been narrowed to a question as to whether our vote shall be influenced by sentiment or utility.

We have heard numerous speeches in support of the sentimental side of the question. The arguments used have been on the lines used by the Chinese in their opposition to the building of railroads in China.

They claim that the building of these railroads will pass through and thereby desecrate the very numerous cemeteries of that country and disturb the rest of buried ancestors.

The sentimental supporters of this amendment object to the invasion and desecration of the sacred precincts of the Mall, claiming it will mar the beauty and symmetry of a public park reservation which, some time in the far distant future, is to be made picturesque, beautiful, and lovely by the expenditure of millions of public money and the inauguration of a costly and extensive system of landscape gardening.

Let us first consider one point of the sentimental argument, and ask ourselves the question as to whether the quiet, serenity, and exclusiveness of the Mall will not be much more affected by obliging the whole traveling public, with horses, wagons, cable cars, and drays to go through this park at all hours of the day and night to reach the station than to have the railroad trains traverse it on an elevation and discharge its passengers where they now do. I do not think there can be any question that every unprejudiced member must reach the conclusion that the passage of the traveling public constantly will very much more disturb the property for park purposes and rob it by the constant noise and confusion of the most desirable uses of park property.

Mr. GAINES. Will the railroad trains not be running through it all night?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Certainly; but what do you want to use the park for at night? Only a very few people use it; then maybe the gentleman interrogating me may be one.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman knows more about using it at night than I do.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I certainly never was there at night, and whether the gentleman from Tennessee has been I know not. Only I am forced to form my opinion from the question he has asked. The objection came from him.

Mr. Chairman, this question should be considered not from the point of sentiment, but from the more important standpoint of utility. Public utility should govern and control the vote of every member.

Nothing is more needed at the present time in this city than permanent, commodious, convenient, and handsome railroad stations. No improvements will be more welcomed by residents and visitors alike.

The bill will give all that can be desired in this respect; and this in addition to removing the railroad tracks and dangerous grade crossing. The Pennsylvania Railroad will spend over $5,000,000 in making these improvements and alterations when the measure is enacted into law.

A very small fraction of the people of the United States live in the District of Columbia. A very much larger portion of the people use this railroad and come to Washington as visitors. Among this large portion are the members of both Houses of Congress and their numerous constituents. Every man who has a seat in this body has constituents constantly coming here.

The people who have visited here before know where the present railroad stations are located with reference to other well-known places and streets. Those who will visit here in the future want to enter the city at the most convenient locations. What, then, is to be gained by dragging the depots out of their present convenient locations and removing them to more remote and very inconvenient places I can not understand, and it is admitted by those preparing this amendment that under its provisions the location contemplated will not be nearly as convenient as the present location of the Pennsylvania Railroad station is.

In addition the erection of these improvements will have a tendency to make Washington a cosmopolitan city. It is not a cosmopolitan city to-day. In many ways it is exceedingly provincial, provincial in its railroad stations, provincial in its restaurants, in many of its hotels. Why, from all I have been able to observe the large majority of the people of this city go to bed at 9 o'clock. [Laughter.] Between 9 and 11 the stroller can hardly find a man on the streets, and to see a carriage rolling by is still more unusual.

It is very hard for a stranger to learn the reason for this condition of affairs in so large a city. The intense mental strain and overworked condition of United States Government employees might be urged, I know, but such explanation would only cause the knowing to smile.

I would favor not only better railroad facilities, but more liberal regulations in regard to hotels and all licensed places. Let them be allowed to be kept open after midnight if they will; that will infuse a little life and brightness and gayety and business into this dull town. It would make it more cosmopolitan. Let it compare in all respects to the great capitals of the world, London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna, and the great cities of the States, St. Louis, Chicago, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. I have often been amused to read in Washington papers reflections cast on the slowness of Philadelphia. Why, gentlemen, there is more life and gayety in Philadelphia in a single hour after 6 p. m. than in a whole week in the capital city of this great nation.

Now, Philadelphia is not to be compared in this respect with many other cities. So let us begin here, join hand in hand in bringing about these improvements, and step by step, as rapidly as possible, make this great capital a metropolitan city—the rival of any in the world.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the fact that so great a majority of the committee report in favor of this plan has great weight with me; but I have not yet heard any argument offered by the committee against the amendment now pending which convinces me, and unless I do hear a better argument than I have heard so far I shall vote for the amendment. The main argument I have heard is of convenience; that to remove the station a thousand feet south would be inconvenient; but for men riding in their carriages or street cars that is absolutely trivial. It makes scarcely any difference, and it certainly leaves the Mall free. If there is no other objection than that, I shall vote for the amendment.

The chairman of the committee said that it would involve engineering complications. He said he did not know what they were, and he can not expect the House to vote on that assurance. As to the statement that is made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] as to how the railroad was treated in this plan, I will agree with him that they are required to pay a large proportion of the expense; but the gentleman, it seems to me, forgets that in this case the railroad was granted a franchise and right to come into the station for nothing, and they have for years paid no lease to the Government.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a statement?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the gentleman prepared to make that statement? The act of Congress grants to this railroad company the right to make entry upon these lands so far as it can. It seems that the lands at that time were occupied by other parties and the railroad company was required to extinguish their rights. Again, at this time the Mall was occupied by a canal that had certain rights. This canal extended the whole length of the Mall and the road interfered with the rights of the canal. The company was to extinguish the rights of the canal that were interfered with. Now, I am not prepared to allow the statement to go unchallenged that they came here without any compensation.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it certainly has not been stated here by anybody that the railroad company paid any material sum for getting in. The gentleman simply says that he does not know whether they did or not. Gentlemen certainly should show what this company did pay before they claim that it has paid. On the evidence before us the railroad has come into the city of Washington all these years and paid nothing for its access or for its tunnel. Now, when it is said that some change must be made in order that the tracks of the road as it comes in should not be an obstruction to the citizens of the District, it seems to me it is only fair that the railroad should pay all the expense. I agree that when a railroad owns or has paid for its right of way it is fair that the city should pay a portion of the expense. In Massachusetts in such cases the railroad company has to pay 65 per cent, the State 15 per cent, and the city 10 per cent. But in a case where the railroad company has paid absolutely nothing—has for years had a valuable lease and paid nothing as rent and nothing to speak of for the original purchase—it seems only fair that the railroad should pay all the expense which is necessary in order that its tracks may not be an inconvenience to the public.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has paid no taxes into the Treasury for the land upon which its depot rests?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not say anything about taxes. I do not suppose it has paid any taxes for the land it occupies.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I wanted to bring that fact out.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It may have paid taxes on its buildings.

Mr. HEPBURN. On land and buildings.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know whether it has paid taxes on the land or not.

Mr. COWHERD. I think it has not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand, it has paid no taxes on the public land which it occupies; it has paid taxes on its tracks.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will read from the act:

> And the said property so occupied by said company, together with the improvements which may be put thereon, shall be subject to tax by the District of Columbia the same as other property in the District.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, it is not a large rent to simply pay taxes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, being engaged in committee work elsewhere, I have listened to only a part of this discussion. I lay it down as a business axiom that commercial necessities require that a great railroad depot should be built as near as possible to the business portion of the city which it undertakes to accommodate. We recognized this fact in New York City in 1867. The New York Central Railroad Company proposed to build a depot near the center of that city. They not only closed eight or ten streets, but four of those streets were taken up by the depot itself, and, in addition, the people of the city of New York taxed themselves $2,500,000 to aid this railroad company in sinking its tracks on land that it already owned. The same considerations would apply to Washington as to New York. The conditions are the same. New York City would rather spend $20,000,000 to-day than see that depot reduced to its old condition and the tracks running with grade crossings.

Now, we have heard a great deal here about the policy or the right of the Government to give this land to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. New York City gave to the United States Government land valued to-day at two and a half million dollars on which to build a post-office. It seems to me that if the Government can receive such a value for its own benefit it ought to give value in return for the benefit of the city in which it has established its capital.

I heard my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] yesterday, with great attention, in his assault on the Pennsylvania Railroad. Why, sir, Don Quixote never did better in his tilt upon the windmills. It was a magnificent effort. But it compared very unfavorably with the effort of the gentleman in this House four years ago on behalf of one particular railroad in Massachusetts.

At that time he advocated, and he convinced you members of this House, that it was perfectly proper to give an essential part of the Boston Navy-Yard to the Fitchburg Railroad, notwithstanding the protest of the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment, who declared that the measure practically ruined the property of the United States as a navy-yard. Mr. Chairman, what has been the result? Why, sir, that action by the House at the instance of the gentleman from Massachusetts has turned into the pockets of the Fitchburg Railroad Company $480,000 a year ever since.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand—and I believe I understand it correctly—is a bill for the benefit of the city of Washington, not for the benefit of the Pennsylvania Railroad. That company will not receive one cent more in profits after building this depot than they are receiving to-day with the depot they already have.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BINGHAM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5036. An act granting an increase of pension to Norton Schermerhorn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 277. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of Charles A. Boutelle as a captain on the retired list of the Navy; and

H. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law.

GRADE CROSSINGS, ETC., BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the House in general discussion, because I have already done so to some extent. But during the debate yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] put a question to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the chairman of the District Committee. I desire to read that question, with the answer:

> Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman has said now that, from a practical standpoint of the interests of the public and the interests of the road and the interest of the District, he is satisfied that it is practically impossible to move the railroad with its depot from the location it has now?
> Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners say it is absolutely impracticable, and the committee believed it to be so.

I know that that reply of the gentleman from Wisconsin seemed to have a very great effect upon members of the House, as it should have had. But I immediately examined what the Commissioners did say, so far as their recommendations were filed in the report of the committee, and I am unable to find anything of that character in the written report, nor do I recollect any such suggestion made in the committee. I remember nothing of the kind before the committee, and hence, for information, I ask the chairman of our committee to state upon what information he based his answer to the gentleman from Illinois.

The printed report of the Commissioners in reference to the matter is as follows:

> The present station was established under authority of an act approved March 23, 1871, by the board of aldermen and common council of the city of Washington, at a time when the people were supposed to have a voice in the affairs of the District government. It is therefore assumed that this location was the choice of the people at that time. This action was confirmed by the act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, since which time the company has been in quiet possession. The advisability of requiring a change of location at this time is left to the wisdom of Congress.

Now, the Commissioners, so far as I can see, do not think it is absolutely impossible, or impracticable, I should say, to make this change, and I would like to have some idea as to what the recommendation was. Hence I ask our distinguished chairman the question, and request him to inform the committee as to where and when they made the statement to which he has referred.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I had no intention of conveying the idea, or even using the term, that it was absolutely impossible to make this change.

Mr. SIMS. "Absolutely impracticable" is the language.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). But that it is absolutely impossible was never suggested. The idea I had was the information I had directly from the Commissioners, not only one, but two or three of them, all joining in the assertion that it was practically impossible to accommodate the general traffic by putting the depot in the place proposed. This was stated in the committee room and stated to me personally. I propounded the question directly to the Engineer Commissioner myself, for the purpose of satisfying my own mind upon the question, and I do not wish to be understood in my answer to the interrogatory propounded, and which has been referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, as saying that it was absolutely impossible to do this.

Mr. SIMS. "Impracticable" was the language.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). Because it is by no means impossible. It is possible to move it down to the Potomac River if Congress so desires.

Mr. SIMS. Then, let me ask the chairman of the committee if the engineer in charge of the work, from the War Department, did not say that it was a practicable scheme?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, the gentleman has the report before him and knows as well as I what the recommendation was.

Mr. SIMS. My recollection is that he said it was practicable.

Now, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in their report failed to use the language which individual members have used in the discussion of this measure before the committee.

There is nothing whatever—no information before the committee—which undertakes to inform the House that there is anything absolutely impracticable or even difficult about the matter. I do not understand that the chairman of the committee undertakes to tell us on his own responsibility that it is absolutely impracticable.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners in their report do not attempt to indicate to Congress what location shall be adopted. I understand them to say that they propose to leave that entirely to the discretion of Congress. They make no recommendations in reference to the matter, but they have expressed in the committee room and to me personally, as well as to other members, their ideas as to the best location and the practicability of moving the station as contemplated by this bill.

Mr. SIMS. I talked to one of the Commissioners myself, and his idea was that it was impracticable only because we could not get such a bill passed, and not because of any difficulty in reference to the engineering feasibility of the scheme.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; it was the engineering proposition to be accomplished. I understood that to be the suggestion.

Mr. SIMS. I did not so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired and the time limiting the discussion on this part of the bill has also expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On pages 4 and 5 strike out section 3, inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove its tracks running north and south on Sixth street west, and remove its depot and passenger station now located on the public reservation at Sixth and B streets NW., in said city, and in lieu thereof the said company shall, under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District, construct and maintain a station building and appurtenances, train sheds, tracks, and sidings in connection therewith suitable and adequate for the convenient accommodation of the public, to be located at such point between Sixth and Tenth streets SW. and between B street and D street SW. as may be most convenient to said company; and authority is hereby given to said company to acquire private property for that purpose within the boundaries last described, either by purchase or condemnation, as is hereinafter provided, and to occupy such portion of the public reservation and streets within said boundaries as the Commissioners of the District may deem necessary for the purpose herein set forth."

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 76.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BABCOCK and Mr. COWHERD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 95.

Accordingly, the substitute was rejected.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to offer the amendment which I suggested in case this one was defeated, meeting the points which I referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

"Provided, That upon the lands in the Mall hereby granted to the use of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company no freight depot, warehouse, or other structure except such as are necessary to its use as the site of a passenger station shall be erected; and that no tracks except such as are necessary to the service of such passenger station shall be laid or operated on said line: And provided further, That any other railway, railroad, or transportation company, now or hereafter to be organized, desiring at any time to in any manner use or occupy any portion of the Mall and buildings erected thereon, the use and occupation of which are herein granted and conferred upon the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, shall have and possess the right to use and occupy the said portion of the Mall in this section described upon such terms as may hereafter be prescribed by law."

Mr. BABCOCK. You had better divide that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is limited upon this section.

Mr. COWHERD. I beg your pardon; debate was only limited upon the amendment offered before.

I do not want to occupy the time of the committee, but I do wish to explain what is intended to be reached by these two amendments, and I think that the committee will certainly agree with me that some such provision should appear in the bill.

In the first place, if you give the 14 acres granted out of the Mall you certainly do not intend that it shall be used as a switch track, as a freight yard, or for the building of warehouses upon it. It is intended, I take it, in the vote that has just been had, giving this property to the company, that it shall be used solely for its passenger purposes and to the use that was limited in the original grant to the company. As far as I am informed, and I have attempted to inform myself upon it, there never has been a measure that has passed the House that gave to this railroad company the right to use a foot of this land except for passenger purposes.

Now, at the suggestion of the chairman, I am going to ask to divide that into two amendments, the first being the one that I have just attempted to describe, an intention to confine the company to the use of this land in the Mall for a passenger depot and the tracks leading to that passenger depot.

I hope the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will consent to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be thus divided.

Mr. GAINES rose and was recognized.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement here. Under the rules, in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. GAINES. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Under the rules, in Committee of the Whole we are entitled to ten minutes upon each amendment, five for and five against the amendment, and I want to give notice now that I shall insist upon the rule being carried out. It is absolutely necessary if we are to reach a vote. As I said to the gentleman from Missouri, I want to offer every opportunity for debate.

Mr. COWHERD. As far as I am concerned, after these amendments are disposed of I have no objection. These are practically all the amendments that I have to offer, except that I desire to offer a motion to recommit at the proper time, and I only want on these amendments time to explain them to the House, so that the members may understand them.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion, as the Chair understands it, is that after this amendment the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] will ask that the discussion on the various amendments be relevant, and that the time be divided, five minutes in opposition and five minutes in favor of each amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; not to exceed that; but I reserve the right to move to close debate at any time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to give, not sell, this property to this railroad. My colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] say that they would not agree even to sell the property, and they have given their reasons for it. Now let us see what is given. The minority report states, and it is not disputed, first, that the land given is valued at $1,394,500; that the cost of the changes borne by the District and the United States is $250,000; that the appropriation for the bridge is $568,000, making a total of $2,212,500.

I am informed, by reading the speech of my colleague [Mr. SIMS], that this bridge is now kept up by the railroad; that the railroad companies are not only compelled to build, but keep the bridge in repair.

Now, the Federal Government is to build a new bridge, and also keep it up in the future, and we do not know what the cost of the latter will be. Nobody knows, and can not tell what it is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amount set down here—$250,000—for damages and costs certainly must be a very small amount. We find on page 13 that the streets to be carried "over the railroad" are Sixth SE., Fifth SE., Fourth SE., Third SE., Second SE., New Jersey avenue, Ninth SW., Tenth SW., Eleventh SW., and Twelfth SW. Then there are an equal number of streets, which I will not take time to read, which are to go "under the railroad."

Now, we are to pay the abutting owners for damages done to their property, which is always a large amount, and the statement last session of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriation Committee [Mr. CANNON] is that to leave the question of damages to a jury in this District is practically to give the plaintiff all he asks for in his declaration. Now, if such a condition of things exists what will the final amount of damages be? In addition to that, we must pay for the approaches to and across these bridges. Nobody has estimated these. It is bound to be very large. These are new burdens the public assumes in addition to this gift.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Gen. John M. Wilson, brigadier-general, Chief of Engineers of the United States of America, on page 20 of this report, specifically condemns this whole project. This gives 34¼ acres of land, and refers to the report of Theodore A. Bingham, Mr. Chairman, who at great length condemns the project and recommends the project that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] and my colleague report in their minority report; that is, "plan No. 5" of the District Commissioners, which locates, as the report says, "a logical location and preserve the historical Mall, permit development and completion according to Washington's original plan."

In addition to that it seems that the report of Mr. Bingham commends the report of the "District Commissioners" to one of our Congresses, possibly the Fifty-fourth, first session. That is alluded to on page 23 of the report. He condemns it, Mr. Chairman, because it trenches "on the Garfield Park, which is one of the seventeen original reservations set aside by President Washington and the early Commissioners for the ornamentation of the capital," and the Mall, laid out by Washington, and up to date kept for a park, as the "Father of His Country" desired it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the chairman of the District Committee agree that this amendment may be offered as a committee amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do agree to the first part of the amendment, that this property shall not be used for freight purposes, but I do not agree to the second part.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first part of the amendment, the amendment being subdivided, will be read.

"Provided, That upon the lands in the Mall hereby granted to the use of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company no freight depot, warehouse, or other structure except such as are necessary to its use as the site of a passenger station shall be erected; and that no tracks except such as are necessary to the service of such passenger station shall be laid or operated on said line."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the second part of the amendment. I want to explain the second amendment. The intention of this amendment is to provide that if in the future some railway, other than this road or some road connected with it, shall seek entrance into the city of Washington it may have the opportunity to come in over this Mall, over the same track, and enter into the same depot, upon such terms as Congress may prescribe. The purpose is this: You are going to give the Mall away, and the only thing it is pretended that we are acquiring is the convenience of having a depot located in the heart of the city.

There is no contention but that if this is to be used simply as a passenger station a dozen railroads can enter as well as one. We are giving them a strip of land 340 feet wide, and you can build 15 or 20 tracks upon it; you can build a depot to accommodate all the passenger traffic of all the railroads that will ever want to enter the city of Washington. Now, then, I submit that we should reserve the right to compel this road to consent to the use of this property, which we are giving away to-day, by other roads that may hereafter enter the city and want terminal stations. Otherwise, if we left it simply with the road to enter into an agreement with other roads, the property we are giving away will be sold by them for millions of dollars. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that a man needs to apologize for protecting the public interest.

But it appears that it has gotten to the point in this House that when a man attempts to oppose any proposition to give property or money to a railroad company he has got to apologize. I want to say that opposition to railroad companies has never been a portion of my political capital or stock in trade. I have never opposed them except to preserve the rights of the people, and I submit that this amendment ought to receive the unanimous approval of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the second part of this amendment, the one now under consideration, I want to say that it is impracticable and not necessary. All rights are reserved by Congress to alter, amend, or repeal; and in handling the street railway charters the committee has been very careful not to give any indefinite rights to some unknown person or corporation that might grow up in the future; but we have reserved that in the hands of Congress; and at all times in all bills that have been reported by the District Committee we have reserved all these rights to Congress.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, you would see at once the folly of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company or any other railroad company spending $5,000,000 in terminals with the understanding that they were building these terminals for any body or corporation that might want to use them. That is what this amendment will do; and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. If the reservation in the concluding section of the bill—"the right to change, alter, or amend"—permits us to pass such an act at any time, then certainly there should be no opposition to this amendment, because then we specifically reserve only the right which the chairman says is already reserved; otherwise, if that reservation does not cover it, or if it covers it in such a way that it remains for the Pennsylvania Company, if any other road comes in, to fix the compensation, or if Congress fixes it, to recover damages, then the chairman's argument falls to the ground; and I submit that the House ought to pass the amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. We have had more than a dozen questions of this kind. The matter of damages for use of other tracks has been retained by Congress, and the amount has been fixed by the court. Now, as to this question as to another line. If another line were to come in and build into Washington to-day, the first thing would be to get permission of Congress, to get an act to give them the right to come in and use these terminals, subject to proper compensation for the improvements made by the Pennsylvania Railroad, to be fixed by the court. That has been the practice of Congress for years.

Mr. COWHERD. Does not the gentleman think when he admits that we give this Mall to the railroad company, taking property worth millions of dollars——

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not admit it.

Mr. COWHERD. But you do admit that we give them the use and occupation, if not the property.

Mr. BABCOCK. We are contributing for this elevation of the tracks a portion of the cost of the elevation.

Mr. COWHERD. Whether it be occupation or otherwise, I care not, but does not the gentleman think it a proper thing for Congress to reserve to itself the right to say upon what terms another railroad should be permitted to enter there, and not give the Pennsylvania the right to shut all other roads out?

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman think the courts are not competent to fix upon the damages or compensation?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know which would more likely fix a reasonable amount, the courts or Congress; but I think it is for Congress to reserve that right here.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress has always followed a certain rule, and I do not think it ought to be changed. I am against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to section 3:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend at the end of section 3 by adding:
"The station building to be erected on the Mall shall cost not less than $1,500,000, exclusive of the car shed, and the design thereof must be submitted to and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The elevated track and car sheds on the Mall shall be of an ornamental or monumental character, and shall be designed, as far as practicable, so as not to impair the appearance of the Mall. The designs thereof shall also be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The President of the United States shall appoint an architect of eminence and a landscape architect of eminence, who shall be advisory to the said Commissioners in these matters, and $5,000 is hereby appropriated for the payment of the services of said architects."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK] whether he has any objection to this amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to it except the last clause, making an appropriation of $5,000 for the employment of two architects to aid the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Those officers have abundant assistance at hand to take care of all these details. That part of the gentleman's amendment I think we must object to. If he will strike out the last four lines, I will support the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me, in the first place, say a few words to the gentleman on that point, for I think when the matter is further explained he will not insist on the objection. In the first place, the Commissioners of this District have no architect to whom they can apply for advice in these matters. Of late all our appropriations for school buildings and other public buildings have provided for competition in the employment of architects, and under this system the character of our school architecture and the District architecture in general has immensely improved within the last few years.

Prior to that time the only man whom the Commissioners could consult in these matters was the inspector of public buildings. The result was that the public architecture of the District—school buildings, buildings for the fire department, etc.—was of very inferior design.

This amendment proposes to appropriate only $5,000 for expert assistance of this kind, and it provides that the President of the United States shall appoint an architect of eminence and a landscape architect of eminence. This is simply carrying out the idea which was incorporated in law one year ago when in reference to the Mall the President of the United States was authorized to appoint a landscape architect of eminence; and the result was the Parsons plan, which we have had before us to-day.

Now, it does seem to me that in this great work, which involves the picturesque and ornamental appearance of the Mall, the Commissioners ought to have the aid of expert men. Under this bill they will be simply advisory. But we ought to give the Commissioners the aid of a landscape architect and of an architect of eminence. If the gentleman objects to having this appointment made by the President of the United States, I would be willing to modify the proposition so that the District Commissioners may themselves employ such talent as they select, paying therefor an amount not exceeding $5,000. In the amendment I am simply following the precedent which we adopted one year ago.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the modification which the gentleman suggests would be an improvement, because under the present bill this entire problem is in the hands of the Commissioners.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If I provide in the amendment that these architects shall be employed by the District Commissioners at a cost not exceeding $5,000, will the amendment with the change be acceptable? I understand the gentleman to say that it will. I therefore modify my amendment in that way.

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to ask the chairman of the District Committee a question. Is there anything in this bill requiring the approval of the Commissioners of the District to the station building to be erected by the company? I can find nothing in the bill affecting that question. It simply provides for approval of the plans of the tracks, etc.

Mr. BABCOCK. Approval of the work and methods of doing the work.

Mr. COWHERD. But nothing is said in regard to the building; the language seems to be limited to the tracks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think my amendment would cover that point.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to move that debate on this amendment and the section be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification proposed by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to his amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] moves to close debate on this amendment and the section.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS as modified, it was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 5, lines 10 and 11, as follows:
"The station building herein provided for shall front on Pennsylvania avenue; and for this purpose the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is authorized to condemn the block lying between Pennsylvania avenue and B street north, between Sixth and Seventh streets NW."

Mr. BABCOCK. I make a point of order that this proposition has already been disposed of by the Committee of the Whole in almost this exact language.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit that this amendment is not the same as the one heretofore introduced. That amendment was in connection with other matter.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] offered an amendment embodying this same proposition; and it was voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is not at the desk.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I withdraw the point of order, and give the Committee of the Whole an opportunity to vote on this question again.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS, it was rejected; there being—ayes 25, noes 46.

The Clerk read section 4 of the bill, under the heading "Temporary tracks."

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read:

In line 21, after the word "the," insert "time fixed for the."

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] referred to my friendship to a certain railroad corporation which does business in Massachusetts, and stated upon the floor of the House that through my influence with this great body the Fitchburg Railroad Company was enabled to obtain possession of a portion of the navy-yard property in Charlestown for its own use. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not advocate any such proposition.

I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the statute passed by Congress in the Fifty-fifth Congress, which was incorporated as a part of the naval appropriation bill, showing the privileges accorded to this corporation at that time.

The act had the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would like to know if there is an amendment pending, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CAPRON in the chair). There is no amendment pending to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I raise the question of order.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I make the point of order that the gentleman's suggestion has no reference to anything that is pending before the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But the gentleman from New York made a misstatement of fact and I propose to correct him.

Mr. CUMMINGS (continuing). The words used by me were simply an illustration of something before the House at the time. There is nothing before the House to warrant the gentleman from Massachusetts in asking to have that statute read.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the Chair will pardon me, the gentleman from New York made a statement to the committee which is not warranted by the facts, and I want to show what the facts are.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then how much do they get?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Why, the dock has not been completed yet.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; you have not complied with your agreement when the act was passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I know nothing of any other requirement except that contained in the statute, and in my own time, having been recognized, I ask the reading of the act to which I refer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that so far the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts has no reference to anything pending before the committee at the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Then I address myself to the general proposition contained in the bill, and move to strike out the last word of the section.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That has not been read yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Oh, yes; it has been read, Mr. Chairman, and I appeal to the Clerk to vindicate my statement, notwithstanding the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto in one minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have been recognized, and I moved to strike out the last word in the paragraph just read by the Clerk. I claim that the gentleman has no right to take me off the floor in that way.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that all debate on this part of the bill be closed in one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that under the rules governing the House in Committee of the Whole it is in order for the gentleman to move to close the debate in one minute, and the question, therefore, is upon that motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I appeal to the gentleman from Wisconsin in charge of this bill, if he wishes to get through with his bill this afternoon, to be fair in the treatment of debate. I only want five minutes to explain my position. My action on a public matter has been questioned on the floor of the House by the gentleman from New York, and I certainly have a right to be heard in my own vindication. Now, if the gentleman from Wisconsin wishes to repeat the scenes of yesterday afternoon, then he can be unfair in the matter of debate. But I appeal to him to carry out the arrangement which he himself submitted to the House a short while ago, that on every subsequent paragraph, after it was read, there should be, if desired, debate, five minutes for and five against, and I think it is only fair and just that, having been recognized, I should be allowed to speak in this matter for the short time I have asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the rule of the Committee of the Whole by which the gentleman, under the circumstances, can submit a proposition to close debate in one minute. I make the point of order that it was not in order while I was occupying the floor and had submitted an amendment myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter of the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin having been disposed of by the lapse of time, it is not necessary to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Then a parliamentary inquiry. By what rule did the Chair put the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin before the House when I had the floor, having been recognized by the Chair upon an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Chair did not put the proposition, but merely stated that the time of debate had run and the gentleman's time had expired, and therefore it was not necessary to renew the proposition submitted by way of a motion by the gentleman from Wisconsin and put it before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know how my time could have expired when the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin was not put before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman's time had expired because the five minutes allotted to the gentleman under the rule had elapsed.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do I understand that I have been given my five minutes, and that this five minutes has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes have expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I believe there are five minutes more allowed on this proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman having debated one side of the question for five minutes, if it is desired the other side also have five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I do not understand that I have had a chance to debate any side of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be recognized upon both sides?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the second last word in the paragraph which is now before the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand the regular order, which is the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not take the floor a second time upon this proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The regular order is the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes to correct a statement that was made upon the floor of the House a few moments ago, in which my public acts were impugned. I think that is only fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes to explain certain propositions.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I object. I think the opportunity should be taken on some other section.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SHATTUC. I submit that a question of personal privilege is not in order in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the Chair rule upon that proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that it not having arisen in the course of the debate up to this time——

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I submit to the Chair that it did arise in the course of the debate, and I appeal to the RECORD to prove that. It occurred within the last fifteen minutes in the remarks of the gentleman from New York. I appeal to the RECORD to vindicate my statement. I have taken the first opportunity to present the matter in the proper form to the committee.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And I shall take the first opportunity to read a page from the New York Herald upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the situation as this: The gentleman asked unanimous consent for five minutes, which request was objected to, and it leaves the Chair with no other thing to do than to state that the committee amendment is now before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does the Chair rule that it is not the right of a member to rise to a question of personal privilege when an attack has been made upon him in the committee and his motives reflected upon? Does the Chair make that ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. It is necessary for the Chair to determine whether or not it is a question of personal privilege to which the gentleman rises, and the Chair does not recognize the present condition of affairs as one permitting the gentleman to rise to a question of personal privilege. Therefore the Chair rules that the demand is not in order, and the question before the House is the committee amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire whether the present occupant of the chair was in the Hall at the time when the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] made his speech a few moments ago? If he was not, I do not see how he is competent to rule upon it.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The question is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know if the gentleman from Massachusetts has not a right to state his question of personal privilege? He has risen to a question of personal privilege, and has never been allowed to state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. We have no rights under the rules as interpreted by the majority in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the matter as the gentleman from Massachusetts stated it, and from his statement the Chair did not think a question of personal privilege was involved. If the gentleman has a further statement to make in regard to his question of privilege, the Chair of course recognizes his right to state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The question of personal privilege which I wish to submit to the House is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], in his speech a few moments ago, stated that through my influence on members of this House—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I hope that the members on this side have some rights that gentlemen on the other side are bound to respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio rises to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield to the gentleman from Ohio. I am on the floor on a question of personal privilege, and I do not see how I can be taken from the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make a point of order, and I insist upon it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], in his statement to the House, referred——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] state his point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The point I want to make is that if the gentleman from Massachusetts will have read, as the rule provides, the language of the gentleman from New York that he complains of, then he will properly rise to a question of privilege, and the Chair can then understand whether it is a question of privilege or not.

That is very simple, and very easy to reach. The rule provides for it, and I insist on its enforcement.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I have been trying to bring that about for the last ten minutes, but the Chair has refused to listen any proposition made. I ask to have read the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. In support of the question of personal privilege the gentleman from Massachusetts asks, the Chair understands, that the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] be read in support of his demand for recognition upon that question.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That is the parliamentary situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the presentation to the House of the Reporter's record, the Chair will state that the question before the committee is an amendment pending. The Chair has not had an opportunity to state this, but it is not possible to get the record until it is brought from the Reporters' room. The question before the House is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REMOVAL OF FISH COMMISSION BUILDING.

SEC. 5. That the United States Fish Commission building and appurtenances, now located on that part of the Mall hereby granted to said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, shall be removed therefrom and rebuilt on the said Mall west of the portion thereof so granted to said railroad company, under the directions of, and according to plans approved by, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army; and the cost of such removal and rebuilding shall be defrayed by the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding $40,000: Provided, That the expense of such removal and rebuilding in excess of $40,000 shall be paid by the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry in regard to this section. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any estimate of the probable cost of the removal of this Fish Commission building?

Mr. BABCOCK. Estimates were made by the Commissioners and the engineer in charge, and the amount, $40,000, was fixed upon by the Commissioners and the Senate committee as being a sufficient sum to rebuild and replace the building necessary for that purpose.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then, in your opinion, this $40,000 will cover the entire expense?

Mr. BABCOCK. That was the opinion of the Commissioners and of the Senate committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is it not also the opinion of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. BABCOCK. I have simply their figures in the statement that I have referred to.

Mr. KITCHIN. But in your judgment they are reliable?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHANGES IN GRADE; WIDENING B STREET.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make all such changes in the lines and grades of any street or streets in said city as may be reasonably required or deemed necessary or advisable in connection with the revision, change, improvement, and partial relocation of said railroad by this act contemplated, and particularly are authorized and directed to widen B street NW., on its southerly side, between Sixth and Seventh streets, so as to conform to the southerly line of said street as now exists west of Seventh street, and to widen Seventh street on its easterly side between B street NW. and the northerly line of West Capitol street, as shown on the city maps, as follows: For a distance of 130 feet south from the southerly line of said B street NW., when widened as herein authorized, to a width of 220 feet, and for the residue of the distance to the northerly line of West Capitol street to a width not exceeding 130 feet.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

On page 9, line 10, insert the word "it" after the word "as" where it appears before the word "now."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GARFIELD PARK.

SEC. 8. That in consideration of and in connection with the changes and improvements to be made in the said railroad by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in conformity with the requirements of this act, the said railroad company shall have and be possessed of the right and privilege, which are hereby expressly granted and conferred, to occupy and use, for tracks and other corporate purposes, all that portion of reservation 17, now known as Garfield Park, which lies to the southward of its main tracks when located as authorized by this act, as well as that portion thereof which shall be occupied by said main tracks as located on said plans and profiles; and also the like right and privilege to occupy and use, for similar purposes, the parts or portions of the several streets and crossings which are by this act vacated and abandoned.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question about this section. The last portion of this section reads:

And also the like right and privilege to occupy and use, for similar purposes, the parts or portions of the several streets and crossings which are by this act vacated and abandoned.

The prior part of this bill seems to vacate and abandon certain streets and parks and then speaks of where they have surrendered it to the city again. This seems to retake that and gives to the railroad the property of the city.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will look at the map, he will find the streets to be abandoned, and he will also find that the railroad company owns the abutting property on the streets to be abandoned.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But you have surrendered back to the city in a previous portion of the bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no. Certain parts of the abandoned property, where they have changed their right of way, are surrendered to the city. These are the crossings. If the gentleman will look at the map, he will understand it clearly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not the map before me.

Mr. BABCOCK. I could explain it much better if I had the map.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF COSTS.

SEC. 9. That the entire cost and expense of the revision, changes, relocations, and improvements of and in said railroad, as authorized and required by the preceding sections of this act, and of all structures connected therewith or incidental thereto, shall be borne, paid, and defrayed in manner following, to wit: The said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall bear, pay, and defray all cost and expense of the relocations, elevation, and depression of its tracks within the limits of its right of way as are authorized and required by this act, including the construction of so much of the bridges conveying streets over its tracks, right of way, and other property as shall be within the limits thereof, and the reconstruction within such limits of the streets which shall be carried beneath the same, the cost and expense of removing its tracks from Sixth street north of Virginia avenue, and from K street and Canal street, and the restoration of such parts of said streets for the uses of the public; the cost and expense of constructing and maintaining the arch or arches for passageways underneath its said tracks located on the Mall, as well as the original cost of paving the roadways and sidewalks to be located within the said passageways; and all other costs, expenses, and damages resulting from, incidental to, or connected with the revisions, changes, and improvements in alignment and grades of said railroad, or the relocations thereof by this act required and authorized, and from changes in the grades of the streets or the railroad, and the lawful operation of the said railroad upon the location and structures contemplated and required by this act, and whether to property owners affected thereby or otherwise, as well as the cost and expense of all street approaches to said company's tracks and right of way, whether overhead by means of bridges or under grade, shall be borne, paid, and defrayed in manner following, to wit: Fifty per cent thereof by the United States and the remaining 50 per cent thereof by the District of Columbia, which last-mentioned 50 per cent shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

All work within the limits of the said railroad company's right of way, including the bridges within said limits, shall be done by said railroad company to the satisfaction and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized to exercise such supervision over the same as may be necessary to secure the proper construction and maintenance of the said work. And all work which is without the limits of the right of way of said railroad company shall be done by the District of Columbia.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 11, line 2, strike out the semicolon where it appears after the word "public" and insert the word "and."

Page 11, line 6, strike out the semicolon where it appears after the word "passageway" and insert in lieu thereof a period; also at the end of said line strike out the word "and."

Page 11, line 7, strike out the small letter "a" in the word "all" and insert a capital "A."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 25, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "The supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction to entertain any suit at law brought by any person whose property is affected or damaged hereby against the District of Columbia within ten years after the passage of this act and to enter judgment for the full amount of said damages accordingly in favor of said person and award execution."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems that there is no provision here by which the parties who are damaged by the change of this railroad could go into court and secure their damages. This provides that the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to determine those damages, not only for the 50 per cent which the District is to pay, but also the 50 per cent which the railroad is to pay, so that the citizens will have their remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction before which these damages can be estimated, and it gives the time of ten years. If the bill passes as now a man will have to divide his damages, and sue the District of Columbia and then come before the committees of this House, the Committee on Claims, and present his claim; and that means practically a denial of his legal rights. This amendment only provides a court that has proper jurisdiction of this question, and I think it should pass.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to state, in the first place, that I am not a lawyer, and do not pretend to discuss law points, but the question was taken up by the lawyers on the District Committee, and the opinion arrived at was that under the common law the rights of all the property owners were preserved and that there was nothing in this bill that took away any rights of action that they might have for damages. If that is true, the amendment is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that this is the remedy only. The right of action can not be taken away under the Constitution. I want to provide a remedy by which the parties damaged can secure damages, so that they may have their day in court, and have their claims decided.

As I stated, they would have to divide their claims for damages, and one would come before the court and the other before the committee of the House and be passed upon by the House. The whole matter should be passed upon by the court, and then the United States could appropriate one-half of the funds which they were entitled to. It will be a speedy and effective remedy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, page 10, after the word "defrayed," insert the words "by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company" and strike out the balance of the section.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment, I will say that the franchise and contribution of land that this bill grants to the railroad company will warrant the company in paying all the expenses of the improvements to its property which this bill enforces. As for myself and for a great many others in my district and other parts of the country, I would, in lieu of this bill, provide that the Government should proceed to condemn and purchase all of the railroad property within the District of Columbia, and improve it as the welfare and safety of the public demand, and make such rental, to all railroad companies as wish to enter the District of Columbia, as might be equitable to the taxpayers and the companies.

If there was sufficient sentiment on the floor of this House to warrant even the hope of such an amendment carrying, I would prepare and offer it. But I have not, in view of the votes we have taken, any hope that such a thing is possible. I insist that this railroad company ought to be made and compelled by this law to pay the entire cost of this improvement. The provisions of this bill fix no limit whatever upon the amount of tax it levies upon the people. We have statements here verbally as to estimates of what it may cost the taxpayers, but there is no limit in the bill, and these improvements, as admitted by the chairman of the committee, provided they are adopted, will cost the taxpayers over one million and a half dollars in cash; and the damage to private property, which is to be paid by the people, is an unknown tax and will doubtless make the total cost to the taxpayers many millions.

In my judgment, we are granting so much in giving away the public land and granting privileges here that the company can well afford to pay all the cost. This bill will enable this railroad company to collect from those who patronize this road in all years to come such rates of travel and freight as will pay to them an annual dividend upon the value of the very property we are here donating. Thereby, I say, we are imposing on the traffic of the public a tax and a burden that we ought not to impose. I hope the amendment I offer will be adopted. At the last session I introduced a bill providing for the Government owning and operating all the railroads in the District of Columbia, with one grand union depot, and putting all trains under ground, which could be operated by electricity, thereby abolishing the smoke, noise, and all danger, but this bill has been pigeonholed in the committee, where all such measures will die until the people shall, as they will at no distant day, determine to stop forever all such plundering as this bill imposes, by the establishment of public ownership and operation of all railroads.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in regard to this amendment, of which I heartily approve. I claim that Congress is absolutely reversing the policy it has always pursued regarding public uses, and particularly railroad uses, in the District of Columbia. Congress has always exercised the right of determining how a railroad shall be constructed and of compelling a change in the construction and in the mode of operation as it saw fit.

Now, so far as District legislation is concerned, steam railroads stand upon the same basis as street railroads. Street railways and steam railways occupy the public streets of the city. Almost the entire right of way of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is over the public streets. Their right to occupy these streets is under franchise, a privilege granted by Congress subject to alteration, amendment, and repeal. So far as the street railways are concerned, the Congress of the United States has exercised that power vigorously in Washington. It compelled the Capital Traction Company, the old Georgetown road, to reconstruct its road and change it from a horse railway to a cable road at an expenditure aggregating millions of dollars.

It took hold of the Metropolitan Railway Company, then operating by horses, and compelled it to change its motive power, and that railway company expended $500,000 in experiments for the purpose of using storage electricity, and then Congress, impatient at the delay, took hold of it again and compelled it to put in an underground system costing over $2,000,000.

Recollect that these were changes demanded by the improvement of the times, just as this change is required. The only difference was that in one case the changes were applied to a street railway, and this applies to a steam railway, both operating under franchises given them in the streets of the city. That cost was imposed upon the Metropolitan Railway Company when it was near the verge of bankruptcy; and, as I say, it amounted to over $2,000,000.

I insist that entirely apart from the valuable contribution given to this work by the District of Columbia in allowing the occupation of these public lands—even if there were no contribution at all upon the part of the public to this work—the railroad company is under just obligation to the public to meet the demands of public improvement. When this privilege of the use of public streets was given to this company in the first place, the size of the city and its improvements did not warrant the imposition of the cost of elevated tracks, but it was a matter of mere privilege to the railroad company to allow grade crossings, and Congress could compel such a change whenever it saw fit.

It is the duty of the railroad company to provide at its own cost railway terminals and to conduct its business in such a manner in the public streets of the city as not to cause obstruction or inconvenience; and the expense arising from any such change should be imposed on the corporation itself, just as in the case of the street railways of the city. This company does not come to us in forma pauperis. It comes here as a great corporation—not a struggling corporation, as it was twenty-five or thirty years ago, when it first secured these privileges, but a corporation amply able to respond to every obligation of this kind; and Congress should see, as it has in the past, that no part of the cost of such a change is fastened upon the public Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. RIDGELY)—ayes 27, noes 59.

The Clerk then read section 10 of the bill in connection with the following amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia:

On page 13, after the word "Columbia," in line 12, insert "and the United States as hereinbefore provided."

On page 13, line 21, after the word "Columbia," strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That in every case in which an assessment of the damages or an award shall have been returned by the appraisers the company, upon paying into court the amount so assessed or awarded, may enter upon and take possession of the land and property covered thereby irrespective of whether exceptions to said assessment or award shall be filed or not, and the subsequent proceedings shall not interfere with or affect such possession, but shall only affect the amount of the compensation to be paid."

On page 15, after the word "therefor," in line 3, insert "and its successors."

On page 15, line 8, strike out "railroad" and insert "railway."

On the same page, after the word "company," insert "and its successors."

On the same page, after the word "traffic," in line 10, insert "and for its other corporate purposes."

Mr. COWHERD. I desire to ask the gentleman's attention to a provision on page 14, reading as follows:

And it shall be lawful for said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to extend and construct, from time to time, branch tracks or sidings from the lines of railroad authorized by this act into any lot or lots adjacent to any street or avenue along which said lines of railroad are located, upon the application of the owner or owners of such lot or lots, to enable such owners to use their property for the purposes of coal, wood, or lumber yards, manufactories, warehouses, and other business enterprises.

I would like to know whether under this provision this company will be authorized to cross any street other than those over which they are permitted to run their tracks by the express provisions of this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. The language of the provision is, "any lot or lots adjacent to any street or avenue along which said lines of railroad are located."

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to know whether in the opinion of the chairman of the committee this provision will give the company permission to go outside of the blocks adjoining the streets appropriated. As a matter of fact, four-fifths of this road now runs alongside wood and coal yards. By reason of the change of grade these concerns will have to construct new sidings and turnouts at great cost. I do not object, however, to the provision in that respect. I simply want to know whether under this provision the company can run over any street not already specified in the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not understand that the provision gives the company any right of that kind; it is not so intended.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the question will be taken on the amendments of the committee in gross.

There was no objection.

The question being taken the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I wish to make a statement. That gentleman was corrected this morning by the gentleman from Iowa in regard to what he denominated the appropriation for the building of a new bridge. I wish to state that while wrong in fact the gentleman was right in substance. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company now runs its road over the Long Bridge, which was built by a private company, but afterwards, when destroyed, was rebuilt entirely at the expense of the Government. The Baltimore and Potomac Company obtained from the Government a right to run its tracks over that bridge, provided the company should maintain a highway bridge in connection with it, which was to be kept in repair at the expense of the company.

This bill now proposes to separate the highway bridge from the railroad bridge, and the sum of $568,000 is appropriated to build this highway bridge, which structure is to be maintained forever at the expense of the Government. Therefore, the gentleman was practically right when he said we were appropriating $568,000 to relieve the company of its obligation to maintain that bridge.

Mr. Chairman, in order to get this matter before the House, I shall move to amend by striking out the section just read and inserting in lieu of it a section proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Allen, of the Corps of Engineers, in his report to Brigadier-General Wilson. This officer reports against the proposition to build two bridges, holding that two structures of this kind so close together will cause a blocking of the ice and drift coming down the Potomac, and will result in great detriment to traffic along the river. In lieu of the pending section, I offer the section which I sent to the desk.

LONG BRIDGE.

SEC. 11. That inasmuch as the present Long Bridge over the Potomac River is inadequate for the accommodation of the largely increased railroad and vehicular traffic, is in a measure obstructive of navigation, and needs to be reconstructed, the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is hereby directed and required to remove the present Long Bridge across the Potomac River, and, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, to build on practically the same line a new bridge in lieu thereof, said new bridge to be for railroad purposes only and to be adapted for two or more railway tracks, the Long Bridge to be removed and the new bridge constructed within four years from the date of the passage of this act. The said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove the Long Bridge and shall build, maintain, and keep in repair said new bridge at its own cost and expense, and shall maintain an efficient draw in said new bridge, operating the same so as not to unnecessarily impede the free navigation of the Potomac River at any hour of the day or night, and shall give other railroad companies the right to pass over said bridge upon such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon between the companies or prescribed by Congress.

Mr. COWHERD. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out section 11 and insert as a substitute the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That inasmuch as the present Long Bridge, consisting of two spans across the Washington channel of the Potomac River, of a causeway across Potomac Park, and of a bridge of thirteen spans and a draw across the Virginia channel of the Potomac River, fails to meet public needs in the following manner: The causeway obstructing communication between the upper and lower portions of the park and being, also, unsightly; and the bridge across the Virginia channel being inadequate for present and prospective railroad and vehicular traffic, as well as for pedestrians, and being also in a manner obstructive of navigation, and not being capable of alteration to meet the demands of the public, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause the removal of the said bridge across the Virginia channel and of the said causeway across Potomac Park, and the construction at that locality of a combined railway and highway bridge of steel, of broad spans, with sufficient draw openings, and a draw or draws, to be opened promptly for the passage of vessels, and providing for a clear headroom of at least 18 feet from the plane of mean low tide to the lowest part of the superstructure; to provide for sufficient width of carriage way and sidewalk and for two or more railway tracks (not exceeding four tracks); and also to cause the replacing of the said causeway across the said Potomac Park by a viaduct of steel, providing for a similar number of railway tracks (not exceeding four); the plan for both bridge and viaduct to be of pleasing design, and the design for the viaduct to admit of free communication through it, and also a good view through it of Potomac Park. And the Secretary of War is also authorized and directed to cause such work to be done as may be needed to the piers or abutments at, and the spans across, the said Washington channel, to a proper connection with the said viaduct; and to also cause the construction of a paved roadway, with sidewalks, across Potomac Park at park grade, or at such grade as he may determine upon, to connect, by suitable inclines, with the bridge crossings over the Washington and Virginia channels. The plans for the foregoing work to be prepared and the removal and construction to be done by the Secretary of War. And it is hereby provided that the railway tracks shall be running tracks, and that railway cars or engines shall not rest for any length of time upon the tracks of the said viaduct, bridge, or spans: And provided further, That the expense of the removal of the said causeway and bridge and of the building of the new bridge across the Virginia channel, of the viaduct, of the roadway and inclines, and of the work at the crossing of the said Washington channel shall be equally borne by the United States and the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and that the said railroad company shall have the free use, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, of the said track throughout the distance from Washington, D. C., to the Virginia termination of the bridge, and shall operate the draw and light the bridge at its own expense, and shall also keep the said bridge, viaduct, and spans in repair at its own expense, all to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of War; the road across Potomac Park herein provided for to be maintained and kept in repair by and at the expense of the United States: Provided, That other railroad companies shall have the right to cross the said bridge upon such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That Long Bridge shall be a free bridge, without tolls or charges whatsoever, for the passage, at all times excepting when the draw shall be open for vessels, of vehicles, pedestrians, and driven animals.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and the pending amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken upon the substitute proposed by Mr. COWHERD for the eleventh section, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PASSENGER BRIDGE.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into a contract with the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to construct within two years after the passage of this act, at a point not less than 500 feet above the site of the present Long Bridge, a new and substantial bridge for highway travel, of iron or steel, resting upon masonry piers and provided with suitable approaches, and with a sufficient draw, all in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of War; and there is hereby appropriated (one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated) the sum of $568,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid from time to time, as the construction of the said bridge progresses, by the Secretary of War, under such regulations as he shall prescribe.

The said bridge shall be for highway traffic, and all street railroads chartered or that may hereafter be chartered by Congress shall have the right to cross said bridge on such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon between the companies or prescribed by Congress: Provided, That the street railroad now using the Long Bridge shall be permitted to change its location so as to cross the highway bridge herein provided for; all plans for such change to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army: And provided further, That a standard underground electric system of street-car propulsion shall be installed by said company on the park highway leading to said bridge, and that the cost of asphalt paving between the tracks and 2 feet outside thereof shall be paid by said company. Each street railway company using said bridge shall pay, in addition to other taxes as by its charter provided, one-half of 1 cent for each and every passenger carried across said bridge.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Page 16, line 2, after the word "Company," add the words "or any other party."

Page 16, lines 20 and 21, strike out the word "reasonable," in line 20, and also the following: "agreed upon between the companies, or."

Page 17, line 4, after the word "bridge," insert the following: "and no dynamo furnishing power to this portion of the road shall be in any manner connected with the ground."

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 11, page 17, after the word "permitted," the words "with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be first taken on the committee's amendments, and, without objection, they will be voted upon in gross.

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. PEARRE; which was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PLANS TO BE SUBMITTED TO DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 13. That before any portion of the work herein described shall be authorized plans and profiles of the entire work, except such as relate to the new bridges authorized by sections 11 and 12, in accordance with the provisions herein contained, shall be prepared by the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and shall be submitted for approval to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Duly authenticated copies of said plans and profiles shall, after approval, be filed with the Commissioners aforesaid, and all work shall be done in accordance with them and shall be completed within five years from the date of the passage of this act. The company shall also deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia such sums of money as the Commissioners of said District may reasonably require to cover the cost of District inspection.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few minutes ago in the debate on this question the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] used the following language—and I wish to take the time of the House to make reply: That the gentleman from Massachusetts—at that time advocated, and he convinced you members of this House, that it was perfectly proper to give an essential part of the Boston Navy-Yard to the Fitchburg Railroad Company, notwithstanding the protest of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, who declared that the measure practically ruined the property of the United States as a navy-yard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition to set apart or allow certain privileges to be given to that railroad company was made by the Naval Affairs Committee and reported unanimously to this House. The matter was favored by the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The actual facts differ so radically from the statements made in the House by the gentleman from New York but a short time ago that I ask the indulgence of the House that such act may be read. I ask the Clerk to read the law I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to provide for the enlargement of the slip or dock at the southern boundary of the United States navy-yard at Boston, Mass., partly upon the land of the navy-yard and partly upon lands belonging to the Fitchburg Railroad Company, said slip to be enlarged beyond its present width 80 feet upon the lands of the United States and 20 feet upon the lands of the Fitchburg Railroad Company, so that the same shall be 160 feet in width, measured northerly from the land parallel to and 20 feet southerly from the boundary between the lands of the United States and lands of the Fitchburg Railroad Company, and to be increased in length to a total of 570 feet, measured from the harbor commissioner's line as now established upon the front of the said railroad company's property; the said slip to be used by both the Fitchburg Railroad and the United States for the berthing of vessels at their respective wharves; and the Secretary of the Navy is empowered to make a contract with the said Fitchburg Railroad Company pursuant to the provisions of this act.

That in consideration of the privileges granted by this act to the Fitchburg Railroad Company for the use of a portion of this slip extending northerly of the boundary line of the United States navy-yard, said railroad company shall build suitable retaining walls upon the east side and at the head of the slip upon the Government lands, or if the United States shall so elect in lieu thereof shall pay to the United States such sums of money as may be determined by arbitration, and shall dredge the entire slip or basin to a depth of 30 feet at mean low water and maintain such depth as long as it enjoys the privileges above stated. It is further provided that the said railroad company shall use and occupy only 60 feet of the width of the said basin within the limits of the navy-yard property, and is to erect no construction of any kind within the limits of the said basin, either upon the lands of the Government or upon that portion of the said railroad company's lands included in the basin. That the right to use said dock or any part thereof by said railroad company may be temporarily suspended by the Secretary of the Navy whenever in case of war or other emergency it shall be necessary, in his judgment, for the United States Government to have the exclusive use of the same, and for any such suspension said company shall not be entitled to any compensation.

The Secretary of the Navy shall notify the railroad company to that effect, and thereupon and during the continuance of such emergency the Government shall have the whole use of said dock. That the entire expense of the construction of the said slip or basin and all future repair thereof shall be borne by the said railroad company, including the excavation and removal of any wharves, piers, buildings, earth, or constructions of any kind that may be upon the said site, and said materials and constructions shall be disposed of in such a manner or deposited in such places as shall be designated, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, and the construction and improvement herein provided for shall be without any expense whatever to the United States. That the privileges hereby granted to the Fitchburg Railroad Company shall become null and void unless the improvements hereby authorized are begun within six calendar months from the date of the approval of this act, and completed in every respect in accordance with the terms hereof, and to the acceptance of the Secretary of the Navy, within eighteen calendar months from the same date.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The reading of this act shows that the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] was erroneous. No land belonging to the navy-yard in or around Boston has been given by the United States Government to the Fitchburg Railroad. The Fitchburg Railroad has been allowed to improve its own docking facilities adjoining the navy-yard, and in addition to that has been allowed to use 60 or 70 feet in width of the abandoned part of the Government navy-yard at Charlestown, which it improves at its own expense. This improvement cost the Fitchburg Railroad Company, I understand, three or four hundred thousand dollars. The United States Government is allowed to take entire possession of it at any time, using both sections of the dock for the use of its vessels in any emergency and at any time that the Secretary of the Navy thinks proper.

Charlestown is the great terminus of the system of railroads entering Boston from the north. Additional accommodations were urgent when this matter was before Congress. No other means were available for providing additional docking accommodations for Boston's increasing commerce; and I am proud if, through any effort of mine, this great aid to Boston's commerce has been given. The Government, through this same legislation, has secured increased wharfage accommodation for its own ships without expense, and what was formerly the most unsightly portion of the navy-yard is now one of its most sightly parts. The cost of the entire improvement is being met by the Fitchburg Railroad, while the title and property still remains in the possession of the Government. The statement of the gentleman from New York that it has netted a revenue of $408,000 to the Fitchburg Railroad Company is absurd, because the improvement is not yet completed and will not be for some few months.

When the improvement is finished it will be found that the Government will have consummated an act not only of immense advantage to itself, but of great advantage to the commerce of the city of Boston.

This proposition is an entirely different one from the one now before the House, which gives outright to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company 34½ acres of the public domain for railroad purposes without the payment of a single dollar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is evident that this bill is about to become a law, and inasmuch as I have endeavored to be recognized before and have not succeeded, I should like to use five minutes now.

I do not see the urgent necessity of this great speed in the passage of this bill. We know as a matter of fact that cities in this Union much larger than Washington do not provide that railroads coming within their limits shall be elevated. No statistics have been offered by the gentleman in charge of this bill showing whether it is dangerous or not. I asked the gentleman a question as to whether any evidence was presented before the committee on that subject, and he said that there was not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that inasmuch as the Government has in view the improvement of the Mall; inasmuch as Congress has appropriated money for the purpose of ascertaining in what way it can best be improved; inasmuch as there have been propositions for the condemnation of all the land between Pennsylvania avenue and the Mall for the public buildings of the Government and to make Pennsylvania avenue the most beautiful avenue in the world, it seems to me now, while those projects are before Congress, and as they will be considered by Congress within the next two or three years, it is premature to talk about legislation by which we will disfigure the Mall to such an extent as to make these improvements absolutely ridiculous and impossible. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we can wait a while for these improvements. I have heard it said upon the floor of this House that the railroad companies do not want to do this improving. If that is true, let us wait; let it rest, so as to have a little time to determine whether we are going to improve the Mall. Let us see whether we are going to make it a great park, whether we are going to put the public buildings of the Government on Pennsylvania avenue and make that a most beautiful street.

Mr. Chairman, bearing these facts in mind, it seems to me now that irrespective of the cost, irrespective of what the Government is going to pay or not going to pay, this is premature legislation. Let us determine either to defeat the project to improve the Mall and then grant this, or else not to grant it until the matter is determined.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are any number of cities in this Union much larger than Washington City that do not require their railroads to enter upon stilts, as it were. It may be a safety measure, and in time it should come, but it seems to me, nevertheless, that nothing disastrous will happen if we do not pass this in the next week or in the next year. It seems to me that we should consider now as to whether we want to destroy the Mall or whether we do not; whether we want to have it a great public park or whether we do not.

Personally, I am in favor of the condemnation of every foot of land lying between Pennsylvania avenue and the Mall. It may cost a good deal of money. I believe that it will probably cost several million dollars, but I believe that this Government could not appropriate money to better advantage for the beautification of this city than by doing this thing. As long as we know that a considerable number of the Representatives in this body and also Senators are in favor of such a measure it seems to me that we ought not now to stop forever any chance of making that improvement. This measure involves the question whether we are going to destroy that great public ground for a pleasure way and for a great public park. If we pass this bill, it does not seem to me that it will be wise to attempt to make that a beautiful park. If we do not pass the measure, then it seems to me we ought to beautify it. Consequently, it is purely a question whether or not we want to beautify this great public place in the city of Washington.

For my part I must say that I think that Washington ought to be a beautiful city, and I think it ought to have a great public park, and it ought to have public buildings located in such a way that anybody coming to this city could see them. But if this measure is passed, then there will be no opportunity for it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to vacate one committee amendment that was adopted—the two words "and required," on page 17, line 12. That is permission for the Mount Vernon Railway to cross the bridge. They object to the word "required," because it is possible they may want to cross on the railroad bridge, and they do not care to be required to cross a bridge that they may not want to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to section 12, to an amendment, on page 17, of that section, and reconsider the amendment, and that the amendment be rejected. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the bill be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 19.

So the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2329) called the Baltimore and Ohio bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2329) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings of railroads in the District of Columbia, to require and authorize the construction of new terminals and tracks for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, after talking with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], an arrangement has been made by which I submit the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and asks that it be read for amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

Mr. BABCOCK. This request is made in the interest of members who want to get home, and they want to know when this measure can be voted upon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not a copy of the bill, and I want to read it.

Mr. BABCOCK. It will be read by sections, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection?

Mr. COWHERD. If the Chair please, I want to understand the request of the chairman of the committee. As I understand it, in waiving the demand for the first reading of the bill I do not understand that we are to proceed with the reading of the bill by sections, but propose to discuss the bill in general debate, and after we have discussed the bill then to proceed to read the bill by sections.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no disposition on our part to cut off a reasonable debate in explaining the bill. The first reading of the bill simply takes up the time.

Mr. COWHERD. As I understood, the request submitted by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was that the first reading of the bill be waived and that the bill be read by sections. What we wish is to waive the first reading of the bill and discuss the bill in general debate.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin now asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that possibly we can make some arrangement to close general debate and fix the time so that members will know when to come in here and vote. That is for the convenience of the members of the House.

Mr. COWHERD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned personally, I want somewhere from twenty to thirty minutes. I will not use more than thirty minutes; but the gentleman knows there are always questions asked. Now, my colleague [Mr. SIMS] wishes some time, and also the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. BABCOCK. How would half past 3 do to commence the reading of the bill by sections?

Mr. COWHERD. If you allow us all the time we ask, that would not allow any time for the other side of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. We do not desire to debate the bill at any length. That will give you twenty-five minutes out of the thirty-five.

Mr. COWHERD. I am frank to say I want to explain to the House the question of the appropriation of a million and a half—to do that will of necessity take some time—and also some items of expense which I think are unfair items of expense, and I can not do that in less than twenty-five minutes. We prefer that the matter should be allowed to run along.

Mr. BABCOCK. It is for the convenience of members who are asking when they shall come here to vote.

Mr. COWHERD. I will not attempt to make factious opposition. Suppose we let it run on.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will thirty-five minutes do for your side?

Mr. COWHERD. Twenty-five is all I want.

Mr. BABCOCK. You take twenty-five out of the thirty-five.

Mr. COWHERD. Thirty-five minutes will do for our side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, Mr. Chairman; he wants thirty-five minutes' time, and we will take fifteen minutes on this side, making fifty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in fifty minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. The understanding was that we were to have thirty-five minutes and they fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will have thirty-five minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin fifteen.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to enter into any extended discussion of the provisions of this bill, but I have been asked by the chairman of the District Committee to indicate, on the map which is before the House, the changes that have been made. I think perhaps I will save time by going to the map and pointing out such changes as will be made, and how they will be made.

Gentlemen of the House will see upon this map the two present branches of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The proposed route by this bill begins at Montello Station, on the present Washington Branch, and follows the road along until it reaches a point where it makes a junction with the Metropolitan Branch. The old line of the Metropolitan Branch ends here, and this portion from here in is abandoned by the company, as well as this portion of the present Washington Branch. The two branches are united at this Y in the neighborhood of Eckington and carried in on Florida avenue, the official limits of the city of Washington, on an elevated causeway or viaduct of masonry to the head of Delaware avenue at C street.

The passenger station as it now exists being abandoned, and this line being abandoned by the company, it presents, as will be seen, the great advantage of having an elevated station at grade. The land in this portion of the city on C street being about 20 feet higher than the level of the railroad company as now laid, this structure will be carried into an elevated station, and yet the station will be at grade on C street.

This portion which is tinted pink is now owned largely by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and the bill provides in one of its sections a proper method for condemnation and acquirement of the property by the company. It may be well stated here that no land is given to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company with the exception of a little strip in here in reservation 226, that is formed by the junction of First street and Delaware avenue. This reservation 226, with which perhaps some members are familiar, is a small piece of property used for no particular purpose at this time.

The street on this side of North Capitol street is 130 feet wide and First street is 110 feet wide. This property is all owned by the company, or will be acquired by the company. This improvement will open all the streets in the city of Washington which are now crossed by this railroad, and will eliminate the grade crossings on all the streets from F street. E street is closed, D street is closed, and F street and Massachusetts avenue will remain open and will be carried under the elevated structure which the bill requires shall be erected by the company. From this point out there is a masonry causeway to M street, and the bill provides that from M street to Florida avenue masonry may be abandoned, if it seems necessary, and a plate-iron girder bridge may be erected.

Mr. COWHERD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but the road strikes grade there and runs at grade.

Mr. PEARRE. There is a provision in the bill that M street shall be depressed and this plate girder bridge shall pass over it.

Mr. COWHERD. Over the avenue, but the road strikes grade there.

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; and it goes over M street. M street is carried under the railroad.

The distance along this line is about a mile and a half, and the bill provides that this shall be deeded to the United States Government. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad owns that property in fee; owns its right of way in fee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the House is sparse, and I make the point of order that we can all be seated and yet see the map, otherwise nobody can see.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentleman will resume their seats.

Mr. PEARRE. These street crossings are all eliminated. They are eliminated because the railroad tracks are removed. The bill and amendments provide for the removal of all these in the city of Washington and opens up in this portion outside the District line. The streets are relieved of railroad crossings by being carried under bridges. This is the case with Florida avenue, and it is also the case with T street out here, which will form the main passage of this part of the District and Eckington into the city of Washington.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Are these tracks to be removed as a condition precedent?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; the tracks are all to be removed, and this right of way conveyed to the United States Government by good and sufficient deed.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And that the company owns in fee?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; all this from Montello Station to Florida avenue.

Mr. THROPP. All that portion colored other than red is to be conveyed to the Government, is it not?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. THROPP. All the streets?

Mr. PEARRE. All the streets, of course.

Mr. THROPP. And the company's right to occupy the streets is to be completely surrendered to the Government?

Mr. PEARRE. Completely surrendered to the Government, and the tracks are to be removed.

The bill also provides that the yards of the company shall be located in this Y, at Eckington, this being the device by which the two branches of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad coming to Washington are joined, in order to carry them over this elevated structure into an elevated station, for the purpose of eliminating the grade crossings, which is the main design of the bill.

This street here [indicating] will, of course, be removed. Q street here will be closed. These streets [indicating] will be closed; of these streets [indicating] only a portion will be closed. R street and a part of S street are improved. But there are no structures on these streets [indicating] that I recall at all, there being one structure, I believe, in the neighborhood of this corner. Eckington proper, the residence portion of the place, which is built up, is along here. This property [indicating] is owned by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and consists now of a deep ravine, which will have to be filled up with earth in order to subserve the purposes of railroad yards.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is through Eckington?

Mr. PEARRE. This is Eckington as laid out, but not the built-up portion of Eckington. This property [indicating] is owned by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and, as I have said, consists of a ravine, which some members of the House have observed in going up there and looking over the territory. That will have to be filled up, of course. But this project does not close any of the streets except R at this point. It closes all these streets [indicating] east of the Metropolitan Branch—in this colored space.

The bill contains a provision giving to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company $1,500,000, the consideration being the release to the city by this company of these grade crossings and the additional expenditure which the bill requires the company to make by reason of this elevation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is the value of the land which the company will give to the District a part of the consideration?

Mr. PEARRE. That is, of course, a part of the consideration.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How much is that?

Mr. PEARRE. It is this right of way 66 feet wide and a mile and a half long.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is that regarded as valuable property?

Mr. PEARRE. It is.

Mr. HULL. The main consideration is the securing of an elevated road and the doing away with grade crossings.

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; the entire elimination of grade crossings.

Mr. PAYNE. How much will be the cost of this improvement to the company?

Mr. PEARRE. Something over $2,000,000 additional. The whole cost of the improvement is estimated at $5,599,000.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Including a station?

Mr. PEARRE. That includes the whole improvement.

I should say that Delaware avenue is not closed until you reach this point [indicating]. From here out, Delaware avenue is open. That avenue along here is 160 feet wide. The causeway or viaduct will be only 80 feet wide, providing room for five tracks, with a street 40 feet wide on either side, which will admit, of course, of use by vehicles of every kind.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary for me to go into any further explanation of this matter, but I shall be very glad to answer any question which any gentleman may desire to ask. Then I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is the "roundhouse" located by the bill where it appears on that map?

Mr. PEARRE. An amendment will be offered requiring the company to locate the "roundhouse" at the most easterly point of the Y, which, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, is practicable.

Mr. ROBERTS. And that will be accepted by the company?

Mr. PEARRE. That will be accepted by the company. The plan now is to put the "roundhouse" there [indicating]. That is provided for by the amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say in full frankness that I do not believe that the objections to this bill are as serious as those we raised against the Pennsylvania measure. The main objections to this bill, so far as I have been able to gather them from a study of the measure, is the appropriation of one million and a half of the people's money for the carrying out of this improvement, and there is also some objection to locating the shops and yards in the Y, as marked on the map, at Eckington.

I will say frankly that if gentlemen propose to give over $2,000,000 of the people's money to the Pennsylvania Railroad for an improvement that is not needed, the same reasons might constrain them to give a million and a half of the people's money to this road for an improvement that is needed. I am opposed to both projects; and if the Committee of the Whole will bear with me, I think I can show conclusively that a million and a half of dollars, charged as one-half of the expense attributable to the cost of this elevation, is at least $750,000 more than it should be.

Permit me to say in the beginning that I want to controvert the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa that in modern cities of the United States to-day the rule is to charge 50 per cent to the city or State and 50 per cent to the railroads. There is no such rule. It was done in one or two instances in Philadelphia; but those in the main were cases in which the city by previous ordinances had got itself into such a shape that it had to take anything it could get.

In Connecticut and Massachusetts there is a law regulating this matter; but in Buffalo, N. Y., the city did not pay a single cent of the expense of elevation; they did not pay anything in Rochester; they did not pay anything in several of the cities named in the article which I hold in my hand, published recently in the Washington Star. I have not time to go over all the cases noted. They did not pay anything in Chicago, notwithstanding the fact that the Santa Fe road had paid millions of dollars to buy land upon which to run its tracks to the center of the city—the amount being, if I remember rightly, something like $20,000,000. They compelled them, under the policy adopted at Chicago, to elevate the tracks, and the city did not pay any portion of the expense, but paid only the expense of conforming the streets to the tracks, and assumed all damages arising from the change. We assume those burdens here and adopt the policy of paying 50 per cent of the cost in addition.

Now, that much in general explanation of the terms of the bill. I have said that if we propose to pass the Pennsylvania bill that the same rule should apply to both these companies. But when you do pass these bills you give away more than $3,000,000 worth of property, and in addition to that you give it without a sufficient excuse and without a sufficient return, in my judgment.

When the Pennsylvania Railroad was first permitted to run upon the Mall, I have been told that a distinguished Senator rose at the other end of this Capitol shortly after the ordinary resolution was passed to appoint a committee to call on the President of the United States before Congress adjourned and inform him that Congress was ready to adjourn and ask if he had any other legislative business to lay before them—this distinguished Senator rose and proposed that they also call upon the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and ask if it had any legislative business to recommend. And I submit that when we pass these two bills it will be eminently proper to send a committee to wait upon the two roads and ask if they have anything new to offer or anything further to recommend.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to certain items in this bill, and wish them to give attention to the map which is before us, and I submit in all fairness to gentlemen, if they will bear with me in going over these matters, that they can not but come to the conclusion that these items, as I believe they were in the Pennsylvania bill, have been boosted up to two or three times their proper sum for the purpose of inducing us to give them a liberal appropriation.

Now, this Baltimore and Ohio Railroad surrendered to the city this tract of land, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Maryland, along the right of way here from Florida avenue to the junction of the two lines, and you will notice on the map that is practically the same distance as the new right of way which is granted by the provisions of this bill. In surrendering that right of way we acquire a little over 13 acres of ground.

Now, they say that we should pay one-half the cost of acquiring this right of way. Do you know the number of acres you are acquiring and the number that you are giving away under the provisions of this bill? You are called upon to pay the cost of acquiring 94 acres. Have you thought of that? Are you prepared to go to that extent in the way of expenditures? Here are the two lines, and you acquire the right of way that this road has held for a period of about fifty years that is charged to us at $50,000, and we pay for this other property that we must acquire $360,000. That will be seen on page 18 of the Senate report, if gentlemen happen to have it before them.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman explain to the committee how wide this right of way is—that in some places it is 200 feet wide, and yet on account of the great cuts in it it really amounts to but 50 feet?

Mr. COWHERD. It does not require that 200 feet for the right of way. It is true that there are deep cuts in some places, but there is a very large proportion of this property which is capable of improvement and can be sold for residence property or sold for any other purposes at good prices should the company choose so to do.

Mr. BABCOCK. But the gentleman knows that a very large part of this line is a deep cut.

Mr. COWHERD. I have just said so. But I am coming to that, and will refer to that portion of it as I proceed.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman talks of acquiring 94 acres?

Mr. COWHERD. I will come to that also as I proceed.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that we are charged $360,000 for this right of way down here. We can use 13 acres which we acquire, which is estimated to be worth $50,000. We ought to be charged with $50,000 and such additional sum as is rightly required to acquire the new right of way, say $100,000, and we pay one-half of that sum.

That would reduce that sum of $360,000 about $260,000, and if you will take that from the first paragraph in their expense attributable to elevation and change of line, it will reduce it from $914,360 to $644,360. And, mark you, that is allowing double as much to the railroad company for the value of the land on this new line as we are charged for the value of the other land, and we take their figures as to what it is worth.

Mr. SHATTUC. Who is asking the Baltimore and Ohio road to change their track from the old track to the new?

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman mean that because we are asking it that we ought to pay a million and a half dollars for it? I submit that when the road is changed to an elevated track, where the company are not required to keep gatemen, where they can run in and out of the city as fast as they please, put on suburban trains, where they have a perpetual franchise instead of a ten-year right, as at present, the property will be worth millions of dollars more to them than it is now.

Mr. SHATTUC. That may be true, but who is asking for this change?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know; but if the railroad company originated it, there would be no trouble in having some one else introduce it. The road claims it does not want to be disturbed at all.

Mr. SHATTUC. There is no evidence that the railroad company introduced it or originated it.

Mr. COWHERD. There is no evidence as to how it has originated, except that it has long been advocated, and is desired, I admit, by the citizens of the District.

Mr. PEARRE. What evidence has the gentleman to show that this change will not require 94 acres? What does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. COWHERD. I have already indicated that. I must rush on, for my time is limited.

Mr. PEARRE. Have not the Commissioners approved that?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; and the Commissioners admitted that they included land between this point and New York avenue, and the railroad company practically admitted it, that they included land that they had to purchase in order to avoid litigation. Let me say one thing further right here, that one moving reason for putting this cost at $1,500,000 was, as it was practically stated, that so much had been given to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company that this company ought to be put on something like an equal footing.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Who made that statement?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I do not care to go into that. I say that was practically the statement that was made.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I say that I do not think the gentleman ought to bandy statements like that without giving the authority for it. It is a very serious charge.

Mr. JENKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that I was present at all the meetings of the committee? I was so present, and I would thank the gentleman to state to the House and to the country who it was that made any such statement.

Mr. COWHERD. I said that was practically the statement.

Mr. JENKINS. I say no such thing was ever said in the committee, and I was there every moment.

Mr. COWHERD. This was what was said, and the gentleman will admit it. This was the remark made by Mr. Wight, that in making up their estimates it was intended to put them practically upon an equal footing, that there was an endeavor to put them upon an equal footing, and that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had been conceded certain rights, and that there was an endeavor to concede something like the same amount to this company.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Wight is one of the Commissioners.

Mr. COWHERD. He was formerly, but is not now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. He is now a private citizen.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but he is one of the Commissioners who signed this report.

Mr. BABCOCK. That in the elevation scheme they should be treated equitably as between the two roads.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not want this taken out of my time. Now, this is the first point of reduction, $260,000 on 94 acres of land. And in doing that remember we allow double as much for this right of way as we get for the old one, according to the estimated value. Now, they charge us $227,000 for the improvement in this yard at Eckington.

I want gentlemen to remember that the present Baltimore and Ohio has no freight yards which are accessible. Their freight yards and sidings are practically scattered along their right of way at different points. Their roundhouse is located, as they themselves admit, at a very inconvenient point, out at Trinidad, and the engines have to switch around from this branch to get to it. They propose, in the first place, to move that roundhouse to a point in the Y, the most convenient and accessible point on their whole line, and they ought to be permitted to move it to some accessible point. The roundhouse, as it exists at present there, I should estimate was worth from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars.

As I remember, some such question was asked of Commissioner Beach, and he said he had no estimate upon it, but he should think it was worth something like that sum. Gentlemen, when we tear down the Fish Commission building up here and move it, we say it will only cost $40,000 to tear it down and rebuild it, but when they tear down that roundhouse and put it here in a place where it will be ten times as good as it was before, and worth more, we are to be charged $100,000 for moving it; and that is one of the items of expense in this bill. I submit that item ought to be cut out of this bill, or at least it ought to be very materially reduced.

I would allow them $20,000 and no more, because the road is very much bettered by having it over there, and we ought not to be charged with the betterments of the railroad. The gentleman from Wisconsin said that there was a great big cut. There is a big cut, and I may add we are charged with a big sum for making it; and I agree if we are to pay half the cost of this shift we should pay half the cost of this excavation, and when they charge for excavating 205,500 cubic yards, at 35 cents a yard, $71,925. I make no objection to the charge, provided 35 cents a cubic yard is a fair price for excavating. I have had some little experience in my own home, and I paid 25 cents a cubic yard. When a railroad goes into excavating it does so with a great steam shovel, that takes up a cubic yard at a dip. When I had it done it was by an Irishman with a pipe, a shovel, and a wagon. [Laughter.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It depends something on the haul.

Mr. COWHERD. That is what I am going to show. Suppose we admit that 35 cents is a proper charge. The gentleman says it depends upon the haul. But the 35 cents for excavation should include taking the earth out and dumping it. Mark you, they have to make a fill of 15 to 20 feet over here at this point [indicating], and in making that excavation they at the same time make this fill. The engineer frankly said that was what the dirt taken from the cut was to be used for. We are charged with $71,925 for taking the dirt out and $94,500 for putting it in. That is a double charge, and that is all there is to it. [Applause.] When you take it over there in the loaded cars and dump it, there ought to be no other charge than the 35 cents a cubic yard, and therefore they ought to strike out the $94,500 charged in the Eckington yard estimate.

Mr. PEARRE. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. COWHERD. It is in the estimate for the Eckington yard—$94,500.

I must hurry on, as my time is limited. I would strike out these items. I would reduce the cost of the Eckington yard to $52,500.

Now for elevation of tracks. And mark you, gentlemen, here is the only track to be elevated in the whole business. The gentleman was wrong when he said that this part of the track was carried over this street. It is not. The street there is abandoned. But for this elevation of tracks they estimate $616,200. I have no opposition to make to that. I will take it at their own figures.

But, gentlemen, here comes in an item to which I want to call attention. Here is the depot of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Everybody knows the terminals of the Baltimore and Ohio are now insufficient; that they have practically no passenger accommodation; and I submit that the depot has to be changed; and on that item if we pay, if the 50 per cent theory is adopted, one-half of what would be the reasonable expense of building a new depot, that would be practically of the same value as the one they now have, put upon the new location and so situated as to be used in connection with the elevated tracks. They charge us with one-half of the cost of building the retaining walls around the whole property, $810,000. They charge us one-half of the cost of filling all this property for the freight and passenger yards, $525,000. Mark you, here are the yards; they will be closer, they will be more commodious yards, and the best yards possible they could have in the city.

Ought not a part of that to be charged as a betterment of the railroad? Is it fair that the people of the United States are to be charged for that in this bill? I would strike out the item where we are charged with building this retaining wall, because that is surely chargeable to betterment of the railroad, and would allow some fair sum for loss of their present station, say $150,000, and that I contend is more than liberal, of which if we pay half we would be charged with $75,000. Summing these items you will find that the charges properly attributable to elevation amount to $1,328,060, or in round numbers $1,500,000 for the Baltimore and Ohio; adopting the 50 per cent policy, that is $750,000 as our share of the cost, and I again assert that 50 per cent is a very liberal allowance.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not see thus far that any public lands are granted to this company.

Mr. COWHERD. There are no public lands granted to this company.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That being the case, I would like to know whether these changes can be effected in any way by the General Government without the consent of the Baltimore and Ohio Company.

Mr. COWHERD. That is a very pertinent question; and permit me to answer the gentleman. The right of way of the Baltimore and Ohio to enter the city of Washington expires in 1910, and after that time they have no right of way over these streets and no authority to use steam in running trains into the city of Washington, at least over one of their branches. Hence it is to their interest to accept a bill that gives them a permanent right of way.

Let me say here that the Washington Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad that runs from this city to Baltimore and owns all the terminals in the city of Washington was capitalized for $2,600,000, and that it never issued a bond, but on that amount and the earnings from it it built the road from Baltimore to Washington and built the terminals, and yet you are to pay a million and a half dollars to elevate it for about a mile—I do not know just the distance. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied nineteen minutes.

Mr. KING. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has no right of way after 1910 to come into the city, at that time they would have to do it by condemnation proceedings. Now, why should the Government procure them this right of way and give them a gratuity?

Mr. COWHERD. I want to say frankly that I would have no objection to voting the Baltimore and Ohio road permission to elevate its tracks along Delaware avenue, of giving them the streets that we do, and giving them these portions of the streets out here, because I do not believe it will be any serious inconvenience; on the contrary, will be a benefit to the public. This is a considerable gift if you estimate the value of the land. The objection that I make is to the one million and a half of the people's money, and declaring that it is one-half of the cost of elevation when, in my opinion, the total cost of elevation will be less than that amount.

I want to call attention to one further thing. I do not understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to contradict the statement that I made as to what was said before the committee. To remind him of what occurred I call his attention to the fact that I asked the gentleman in committee at the time, and gentlemen will remember it, if it was not better to cut off from the Pennsylvania Railroad than it was to add to that given to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. No member of the House ought to be bound by any statement of Mr. Wight.

Mr. COWHERD. No, I am not saying that they should.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And his motives ought not to be impugned.

Mr. COWHERD. I am not impugning anybody's motives, nor do I think they should be impugned. I have the utmost confidence in Mr. Wight, but I do not think a desire to treat these companies alike and the large gifts to the Pennsylvania Company operated to swell the amount recommended for the Baltimore and Ohio.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri is very familiar with this work——

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no; not very familiar.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is more familiar with it than anybody else we have on the floor.

Mr. COWHERD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask whether the work he objects to with reference to building the retaining walls and filling in is caused by the elevation of the tracks?

Mr. COWHERD. In regard to that I will say this: If you did not elevate the track you would not have to build the walls or have to fill in. The reason I object to it is on account of the betterment to the road. It would better the road more than the amount of its cost, and we ought not to be charged for betterments.

Mr. MANN. Does the road own the property at this point?

Mr. COWHERD. About all of it. The Senate stables are here, and the gentleman will notice that there is a provision in the bill in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. They could use the property without any expense of filling?

Mr. COWHERD. Not unless Congress gave them the right to run their tracks in there.

Mr. GAINES. It is their own property?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but they could not run their tracks across the streets without permission.

I will now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to ask the gentleman if in his opinion this bill is as bad a bill as the one in favor of the Baltimore and Potomac?

Mr. COWHERD. Most assuredly not, and I so stated at the outset. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining, which he reserves.

Mr. COWHERD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I can not say anything in addition to what the gentleman from Missouri has so well said. I think he stated the facts correctly, but I want to say that I agree with him that if the other bill passes I do not see how any member of this House can vote for the other bill and not vote for this if they have any idea of doing equity between the two roads.

I do not know that members ought to vote, when they are voting gratuities to railroad companies, with reference to which gets the advantage; but this company, as I look at it, has got to do vastly more work to make these improvements, which will be of much greater benefit to the city, when made, than the other. So if we are to look to the question of equity as between these two roads I do not see how any gentleman voting for the Pennsylvania Railroad proposition can withhold his vote from this.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. How about the equities of the people?

Mr. SIMS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it does not seem to me the people are in this thing at all. [Laughter.] If I have heard any suggestion that they are to be considered or regarded, I am not aware of the fact. But it has certainly been shown here, beyond question, that we are willing to give lands to the value of a million dollars to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company out of a public park laid out and dedicated by George Washington himself. The value of that property cuts no figure here; the sacredness of it cuts no figure. Why, then, should I stand here and waste time, when this is merely a question of dollars and cents and nothing more?

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman please state where this bill comes from? Does the railroad company ask for it, or not?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know what the railroad company has asked for. The report shows or assumes——

Mr. VANDIVER. Do the people ask for it?

Mr. SIMS. Who are the people? [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDIVER. The people of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. Gentlemen on the other side say they are the people, and if that be true the people are on the side of the railroad company in this case and have asked for this measure.

I want to say, as I said before, that I would rather give the Pennsylvania Railroad Company a million dollars cash, to be voted out of the money of the people, than cut the Mall in two. But the right to occupy that Mall—a right more valuable than money—has been given to them, and in view of that I do not see how gentlemen can in justice vote against the proposition of this railroad company, the Baltimore and Ohio, because, if the other proposition is right, this is naked justice.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I would like to have this matter placed fairly before the House; and in view of the opposition which has come from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] and the gentleman now on the floor, I would like to ask a few questions. Does the gentleman consider this improvement absolutely and vitally necessary for the safety of the city?

Mr. SIMS. I certainly do.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. That being the case, then, the only objection, as I understand, of the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Tennessee to the proposition is simply the amount we are to pay.

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Then when the gentleman knows that this improvement has been fully considered by the District Commissioners—and no one, as I understand, wants to impugn their motives, when it is known that they have had the most expert engineers to make estimates—does not the gentleman think that their judgment is likely to be better than his or mine or that of the gentleman from Missouri, none of us having had any chance to make any estimates?

Mr. SIMS. I do, if I was absolutely certain that nothing has affected the judgment of those officers except scientific knowledge. [Laughter.] I mean no insinuation on the Commissioners. They are anxious to have this improvement made; and they accept rather than approve this proposition presented, which can get through Congress, while one less acceptable to the railroad company might fail.

Mr. SHATTUC. What is it that raises in the gentleman's mind a suspicion that some bad influence may have been at work?

Mr. SIMS. Why, sir, the word "impracticable" has been used so often in regard to these propositions, and never once applied to the engineering conditions, that I must conclude that the word "impracticable" is intended to refer to the passage of the bills—that the question of getting votes for the measure has been considered rather than the question of engineering conditions.

Mr. KING. Does this bill propose to give to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company a perpetual right of way in this city?

Mr. SIMS. I understand that is the effect of it.

Mr. KING. And their right of transient occupancy is converted into a perpetual lease?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. And the company does not pay anything for this perpetual lease?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir.

Mr. COWHERD. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the proposition embraced in this bill, or one similar to it, has been considered by the District Committee for many years. I have always thought that the two lines of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad ought to be brought together outside of the city limits and that they should enter the city and come to their depot upon one line. This bill accomplishes that. It goes further, as I understand, and abolishes grade crossings inside the city limits, which is right and proper.

It seems almost conceded by members of the minority of the Committee on the District of Columbia that this bill ought to pass if the other bill—the Pennsylvania Railroad bill—passes. I have taken the floor—and I am going to speak only a moment—for the purpose of calling attention to a question incidental to the main question involved and which does not affect directly the merits of the measure as a whole.

If I may be allowed to go to the map a few moments, I will explain an amendment which I think ought to be made to this bill. The bill as passed by the Senate contains a provision which almost accomplishes the suggestion I would make by way of amendment. I shall vote for this bill with the understanding (if I do vote for it) that when it goes to conference the proper conclusion may be reached by the conferees as to the location of what is known as the Y of this road, and the roundhouse and other buildings to be connected therewith.

Here, Mr. Chairman, and I refer to the map before the House, are the two branches of the Metropolitan Railroad Company coming together a short distance this side of the suburb of Eckington. In the plan before us they have placed the Y and the roundhouse and other buildings connected with the road in this village of Eckington.

The people who live out here in this little suburb are much disturbed over the situation, and I think justly so. Some of them have called upon me, and I am familiar somewhat with that part of the city. I have no interest there personally, nobody related to me has any, and I have no other interest except that I have some personal friends living there on R street, and others near there, that I know to be reliable and not speculators, who have gone and built homes and live in them, who have paid four to six thousand dollars for their lots and houses erected upon them. They all say that when you erect a roundhouse at the point indicated by this circle on the map, within the Y, and right in the central portion of the suburb of Eckington, that you practically destroy the value of their homes as homes, and that you impair the value of the property of all people who live in Eckington. Now, what we ask, it seems to me, is perfectly fair and reasonable—that this line, which connects the two lines of the railroad at Eckington, should leave the main line for Baltimore a little farther north than is shown on the map before us and come in at a point on the other branch of the road a little farther north. This would place the north line of the Y outside of this suburb of Eckington, where these people have made their homes.

As I understand it, and as I have said, I am somewhat familiar with that part of the country. The part outside of Eckington, where they ask that this north line of the Y be made, is not built up at all. No one will be injured by the junctions at the points indicated. When you come to the erection of the roundhouse and the various shops and car houses that will be necessary for the road, you impair greatly, if not destroy, the value of the homes of these people. They have therefore petitioned against it, and ask Congress to establish the junctions and place this Y, the roundhouse, etc., at a point farther north or outside the town of Eckington. I think it but fair and reasonable that their request should be granted. The service of the road will not be crippled by making these locations a little farther to the north.

Mr. SHATTUC. Can they not recover damages?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is nothing in the bill providing for damages, though, of course, they would have the common-law remedy. But it would seem to be an unusual hardship for Congress to require men of small means—men worth three or four or five thousand dollars—to sue for damages a great corporation such as the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the original bill provided that the roundhouse should be established in the center of the Y.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know that that was the intention, but it has been changed.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. But after that had been before the committee the citizens came and asked that the roundhouse should be placed on the extreme limit of the Y, as far east as possible.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that. They have shown a disposition to accommodate themselves to the conditions which were offered; and a most estimable gentleman, one of the attorneys of the road, a personal friend of mine, within the last half hour urging this matter upon me, spoke of the desire of the road to go as far as they could to accommodate the people of Eckington and help them out of their difficulty. But the provision is not in the bill, and it seems to me the conferees, when the bill goes to conference, ought to be impressed with the idea that it is the intention of the House that the northern line ought to be put back as far as possible and not damage these people in Eckington.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman has made a very good point, and one which embraces suggestions which embarrassed the committee to a great extent. This bill, the gentleman will observe, does not concur entirely with the Senate bill, because we put it farther back.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know you have changed that to some extent.

Mr. BABCOCK. And I will say further to the gentleman that I agree practically with his statement; and before the bill comes out of conference everything will be done that can be done, which the topography of the country will allow, to make the change here suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES. Will my colleague yield to me a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman from Ohio asked you about the question of damages a while ago, and you replied that the bill did not provide for damages.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think it does not.

Mr. GAINES. Now, the common-law rule is, on the subject of the recovery of incidental damages—that is, where there is no physical taking it excludes the right to recover at all, and you would have to provide for it in the bill or by a special statute, or the citizen can not stand in court.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, one word. I am familiar with this locality, and I speak from my knowledge in the matter. I think the little map which gentlemen all have here—a map sent, I take it, by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to members—will show that the altitude of the ground at this point, where this northern line of the Y diverges from the main line, is greater than it is a little way back to the north. By moving this line back to the north, and making the northern line a little straighter across from one line to the other, they can avoid the difficulties which I have suggested. As I remember the topography of the ground, the altitude is less at the point I have suggested, and the north line could be, for this reason, more cheaply constructed. I do not think there is any question about that, and, as I remember, there is not a residence in the territory this north line would pass through.

I wanted to say that much, and I want it to go into the RECORD, in order that the conferees, when they come to agree upon that line, may understand that there is a disposition on the part of the members of the House, or at least on the part of some of us, to give relief to these people in this beautiful little suburb of Eckington.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee, as my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] has stated, that this was a very embarrassing question to the committee; but the committee consulted the engineers at length, and they assured the committee that it was practically impossible to shift that way; that if it could have been shifted, in the judgment of the engineers, it would have been done, and that the gentlemen representing the Baltimore and Ohio road and the gentlemen representing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia said they would carefully reexamine the question, and if the line could be shifted it should be done. But the gentleman must bear in mind that it is a case of robbing Peter to pay Paul. It may relieve the people in Eckington, but the people on the other side complain just as bitterly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, if my friend will allow me——

Mr. JENKINS. And the gentleman representing the Columbian Institute for the Deaf and Dumb came in and protested against that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But they are away over to the east; not in any possible way affected by this north line.

Mr. JENKINS. And if it were moved in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, then it trenches upon the rights of the people here at Ivy City.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no; Ivy City is away over here [pointing to the map], nearly half a mile away.

Mr. JENKINS. They insist that the works should be retained out here near the Ivy City track.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that putting it here would interfere with Ivy City one-half as much as putting it over there would interfere with the suburb of Eckington?

Mr. JENKINS. The engineers say it is impossible, on account of the topography of the ground—that it is too hilly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think the gentlemen will find that they are mistaken in that when they come to examine it.

Mr. JENKINS. But the engineer said if it was possible to shift it it should be done, and that was concurred in by all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If that is an honest statement—and I have no doubt it is—I am willing to let it go at that.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to it because I want it understood that it was most carefully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement of the committee debate is now closed, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said companies be, and each of them is hereby, authorized and empowered to locate, construct, maintain, and operate, outside of the city limits and south of T street, yard tracks and switches necessary or proper for the purposes of a freight yard, and also to locate, build, maintain, and operate, beyond the city limits, a branch track or Y for the passage of trains directly to and fro between the Metropolitan Branch and the Washington Branch without entering the city; and to locate, construct, maintain, and operate roundhouses, shops, and other structures necessary or proper for the accommodation of locomotives and cars for the conduct of its business, at a point not nearer to Eckington than two squares easterly of the east end of the proposed Y on the Washington Branch.

Strike out all of section 2 and insert the following:

"That said companies be, and each of them is hereby, authorized and empowered to locate, construct, maintain, and operate, outside of the city limits and south of T street, yard tracks, switches, roundhouses, shops, and other structures necessary or proper for the accommodation of locomotives and cars for the conduct of its business or for the purposes of a freight yard; and also to locate, build, maintain, and operate, beyond the city limits, a branch track or Y for the passage of trains directly to and fro between the Metropolitan Branch and the Washington Branch without entering the city: Provided, That said roundhouses and shops shall be located within said Y as far eastwardly as in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia it is practicable."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARRE. There is an amendment which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 22, page 4, after the word "third," the following: "between New York avenue and Florida avenue."

Mr. PEARRE. The purpose of this amendment is to open Third street, so that it will join New York avenue and make a means of exit for that section.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] was asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] what, if any, provision was made in this bill for paying abutting owners incidental damages arising from raising or depressing of the streets or walks. My colleague stated that there was no provision, and unless there was some general law that he did not know what rights of recovery the abutting owners would have. Now, I would ask you to tell me is there any general statute that would protect the citizen against this kind of invasion?

Mr. PEARRE. There is nothing to prevent suit by anybody who is injured by any railroad company, or any other party. That right is still secured to every citizen, so far as damage is concerned. The peculiar character of this matter is such that there is not likely to be much damage as to anybody by reason of any improvement to the city, and if the gentleman from Tennessee will look at the report, part of the $360,000 of which the gentleman from Missouri spoke is to cover damages which might arise from the acquirement of that 94 acres of land.

Mr. GAINES. That may be true; but that is where the property is actually taken, where the party is divested of title, where he has been dispossessed of it; but here is where "incidental damages" arise by reason of depressing or raising the tracks. Now, away back in the early days, you will remember the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the case of Smith vs. City of Washington that such damages as that were not recoverable. It was damnum absque injuria, following the old rule in the case of Calender vs. Marsh (1 Pick.), from Massachusetts. That is the common law. You say that the citizen would have the right to "sue;" but it is the "right" to recover I advocate. Now that rule has been abrogated by a statute in our State, which I had the honor to draw, and it is now the law, passed without opposition. That is where a railroad is depressed or a street is depressed or highway, just as is done in this case, the abutting owner is allowed the right to recover what is known as incidental damages.

Mr. PEARRE. There is no such specific provision in this act covering that.

Mr. GAINES. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that such provision should be made here. Here we have a question when there are street after street, I do not know how many, indeed, of them, that this road is going to tear up by depressing their tracks. There are others that are going to be destroyed by the railroad in raising its tracks. This fact is indisputable, as my colleague said. These people have gone out in a quiet neighborhood and built their cozy little cottages. Yet this great corporation comes in here and makes this invasion of their rights, and we have the right to protect the citizen, and it is our sworn duty and but a mere matter of right and simple justice that we should protect them. It is understood by everybody on the floor of this House that their property will be ruined, and when you do not give them the "right" to recover these incidental damages you are treating their little homes—some up and some down—as if their occupants were a lot of ground mice who live in the ground, or as martins, who live in a box high in the air.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GAINES. Have I been speaking five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was speaking by courtesy of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GAINES. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES. I do not want to criticise——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I answered this proposition fully when the Pennsylvania bill was under consideration. I stated on the floor that this question was taken up by the lawyers on the committee. Not being a lawyer myself, I did not feel that I could speak with authority, but they all held that the rights for damages were preserved by the common law.

Mr. GAINES. With all due deference to those lawyers, they are mistaken. I can show you, by taking the case of Smith vs. Washington, which I can find in a few minutes, that the specific question was raised about depressing the street, and the court decided no right of recovery was allowed. "Damnum absque injuria," the court said, and this is the common law, hard as it is.

Mr. PEARRE. There is only one street depressed.

Mr. GAINES. My colleague says that it ruins these little homes.

Mr. PEARRE. And that is only in Eckington.

Mr. GAINES. I do not care whether it is in Eckington, Columbia Heights, or Uba Dam. [Laughter.] I am talking about the equitable rights of these people, where they live in their little cottages, and where they ought to be allowed to live without taking them away from them by insidious means, with no right to recover when injured.

Mr. PEARRE. There are no houses here at all. The tracks are removed, and it makes them so much farther from the present location.

Mr. GAINES. But the gentleman did not state, when my colleague made his statement that these little homes would be ruined, that they would not be. It went absolutely without dispute. Now that he has left the floor, or at least I do not see him, this statement is made. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not right, it is unjust, and it is wrong to have these people, I do not care whether they live in log cabins or in mansards—I say it is wrong to have their quiet and peaceable possession interrupted in such a way, and we sit here as dumb as oysters, with the right to protect them and not do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 11, page 5, after the word "third," the following: "between New York avenue and Florida avenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the new section which the committee propose to be inserted as section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall, before taking possession of the ground now owned by the United States in square 683, secure and convey to the United States a tract of ground containing not less than 21,000 square feet, which location shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate, and locate thereon a fire-engine house at a cost of not less than $24,000, and stables at a cost of not less than $15,000; or, if said company prefers, it may have the said buildings erected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by depositing the amounts stated above with the said Commissioners and Sergeant-at-Arms, respectively, and when such buildings have been accepted by the District of Columbia and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, respectively, or the amounts necessary for their construction deposited as aforesaid, it shall have authority to remove said structures on the ground aforesaid. And the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall have the right to condemn such land in the city as is hereinbefore required, and for said purposes the provisions of section 11 of this act are hereby made applicable to the provisions of this section.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland intend to offer this as a substitute for the committee amendment?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, insert after section 3 a new section, to be known as "section 4," as follows:

"That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall, before taking possession of the ground now owned by the United States in square 683, secure and convey to the United States a tract of ground containing not less than 21,000 square feet, which location shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate, and locate thereon a fire-engine house at a cost of not less than $30,000 and stables at a cost of not less than $15,000; or, if said company prefers, it may have the said buildings erected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by depositing the amounts stated above with the said Commissioners and Sergeant-at-Arms, respectively, and when such buildings have been accepted by the District of Columbia and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, respectively, or the amounts necessary for their construction deposited as aforesaid, it shall have authority to remove said structures on the ground aforesaid. And the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall have the right to condemn such land in the city as is hereinbefore required, and for said purposes the provisions of section 11 of this act are hereby made applicable to the provisions of this section."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask wherein this amendment differs from section 4?

Mr. PEARRE. It increases the amount of the cost of the engine house from $24,000 to $30,000. That is the only difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and the substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That in addition to the main or terminal station or depot, to be located as hereinbefore provided, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, or the terminal company incorporated as provided in this act, may from time to time hereafter construct, establish, and maintain such additional stations or depots, for passengers or freight, as the company may deem necessary or useful in the conduct of its business, or for the accommodation of the freight and passenger traffic passing over the lines of railroad authorized by this act, at such point or points within the city limits west of Second street E., and east of North Capitol street, as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall approve; and it shall be lawful for either of said companies to acquire, by gift, purchase, or condemnation, any land adjacent to any street or avenue along or upon which the lines of railroad and works hereby authorized shall be located, and hold and improve the same in such manner as it may deem necessary or beneficial to accommodate or promote the traffic on said railroad, and to extend and construct tracks of railroad into and upon any lands so acquired, and connect the same with the tracks on such adjacent street or avenue: Provided, however, That no grade crossing of any street or avenue within the city of Washington shall be thereby created, but such connecting tracks shall be elevated and carried over the portion of such street or avenue crossed in such manner as not to obstruct the free use thereof, and the plans of such connecting tracks and elevated structure shall in every case be first filed with and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. And it shall be lawful for said companies, or either of them, subject to the same conditions and restrictions, to extend and construct, from time to time, branch tracks or sidings from the lines of railroad authorized by this act into any lot or lots adjacent to any street or avenue along which said lines of railroad are located, upon the application of the owner or owners of such lot or lots, to enable such owners to use their property for the purposes of coal, wood, or lumber yards, manufactories, warehouses, and other business enterprises.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

On page 9, line 6, strike out the following: "the city limits west of Second street east and east of North Capitol street" and insert the following: "Provided, That no such station or depot within the city limits shall be located east of Second street east and west of North Capitol street."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARRE. I ask a vote on the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Maryland considered whether his amendment has not already been adopted in effect by the committee amendments?

Mr. PEARRE. I have considered the matter. The amendment is correct as I send it to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, lines 6 and 7, after the word "within," strike out "the city limits west of Second street east and east of North Capitol street" and substitute therefor "said District."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that language has been stricken out by the committee amendments and language has been inserted, together with other language.

Mr. PEARRE. The amendment as originally made was incorrect. The purpose of these amendments is to make the necessary corrections, with which the section will read as follows:

At such point or points within the said District as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall approve: Provided, That no such station or depot within the city limits shall be located east of Second street east and west of North Capitol street.

The language is not now in the bill in that form.

Mr. COWHERD. The object of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is simply to insert the words "as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall approve" after the word "District."

Mr. PEARRE. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the effect of the gentleman's amendment is to insert after the word "District" the words "as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall approve," and to strike out the same words as they occur in lines 10 and 11.

Mr. PEARRE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. This change will require unanimous consent. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOUDENSLAGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 315. An act granting an increase of pension to Moses H. Taber;

H. R. 1288. An act granting a pension to Cornelius W. Roberts;

H. R. 1803. An act granting a pension to Julia E. G. Lewis;

H. R. 4679. An act granting a pension to Micager Philpot;

H. R. 10749. An act granting a pension to Henry L. White;

H. R. 10750. An act granting a pension to James H. Rainey;

H. R. 10778. An act granting an increase of pension to Martin V. B. Winkler; and

H. R. 10847. An act granting an increase of pension to Betsey A. Summers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2582) to provide for establishment of the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River, to ascertain the amount of taxes collected by the State of Texas in what was formerly known as Greer County and the expenditures made on account of said county by said State, and for other purposes.

GRADE CROSSINGS, ETC., BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That if it should at any time be deemed necessary or advisable in the construction of the works hereby authorized to lay temporary tracks on any street or avenue to accommodate the business of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company pending the completion of such works, the said company may lay such temporary tracks, subject to the approval and under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall remove the same and restore every such street or avenue to its former condition, to the satisfaction of such Commissioners, within sixty days after the completion of the works hereby authorized.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, were read, and agreed to:

In line 14 strike out "5" as the sectional numbering and insert "6."

In line 24 insert, before the word "completion," the words "time fixed for the."

Section 6 was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. That it is the intention of this act that the location and construction of the new terminals, terminal tracks, viaduct, and railroad lines hereby authorized within the city of Washington shall be substantially in accordance with the plans agreed upon by and between the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which plans, with the accompanying drawings, maps, and tracings, signed by the Commissioners and by the chief engineer of such railroad company, are filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of said District; but that the company constructing said works shall be authorized to make such minor changes or modifications of or departures from said plans, drawings, maps, and tracings as it may reasonably require or deem necessary, advisable, or advantageous and as the Commissioners shall approve and agree to; and in case of any change or modification of or departure from the present plans the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall submit the new plans to the said Commissioners for their approval, and shall file duly authenticated copies of said plans, after approval, with the Commissioners.

All work of construction authorized by this act which shall affect in any way the existing streets or avenues of the city or District not hereby abandoned and closed shall be done to the satisfaction and subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized to exercise such supervision over the same as may be necessary to secure the proper construction and maintenance thereof. The company shall also deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia such sums of money as the Commissioners of said District may reasonably require to cover the cost of District inspection.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read, and agreed to:

Amend by changing the sectional numbering from "6" to "7."

Section 7 was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. That of the works hereby authorized the viaduct and main lines of railroad thereon and extending therefrom to their points of connection with the Washington Branch Railroad and Metropolitan Branch Railroad, respectively, shall be completed, and said new terminals shall be ready for occupancy, within five years from the date of the passage of this act.

From and after the expiration of five years from the date of the passage of this act all rights of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to maintain and operate the present tracks of its Washington Branch Railroad within the limits of the city of Washington, and the present tracks of its Metropolitan Branch Railroad south of the northern line of New York avenue, and west of the east line of Third street to said north line of New York avenue, shall cease and determine; and the said railroad company shall thereupon, within such reasonable time as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prescribe, remove all such tracks and structures connected therewith from the streets, avenues, public reservations, or other property of the United States within the said city and west of the east line of Third street. Said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall also immediately execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a deed, in due form of law, granting, conveying, assigning, and transferring to the United States of America all the estates, right, title, and interest that it, the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, has in, to, or out of the lands included within the limits of the roadway or right of way of the Washington Branch Railroad of said company from the west line of Second street to Winthrop Heights station and of the Metropolitan Branch for the continuation of Third street from Q street south to New York avenue, of an even width as north of Q street, subject, however, as to so much of said lands as lie north of Florida avenue and outside of the limits of the city of Washington, to the continued maintenance and use of the present tracks of said railroad company thereon, for the purpose of reaching its yard and roundhouse at Trinidad, until its new yard in or near Eckington and its roundhouse, authorized by this act, shall be ready for use, but not exceeding six years from the date of the passage of this act; said company, however, to have the right to remove its tracks and structures from the lands so granted within sixty days after the expiration of its right to maintain and use its tracks thereon.

In consideration of the surrender by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, under the requirements of this act, of its rights under the several acts of Congress heretofore passed, and under its several contracts with the municipal authorities of the city of Washington authorized by said acts of Congress, and in consideration of the large expenditures required for the construction of the new terminals, viaduct, and connecting railroads, as required by this act, to avoid all grade crossings of streets and avenues within the city of Washington, and, further, in consideration of the grant and conveyance to the United States of the lands included within the limits of the roadway and right of way of the Washington Branch Railroad, which can be used for a street or avenue for the public benefit, the sum of $1,500,000, to be paid to said railroad company toward the cost of the construction of said elevated terminals, viaduct, and structures within the city of Washington, shall be, and is hereby, appropriated, one half to be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the other half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. The sum so appropriated shall be paid upon presentation of a certificate by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that the said viaduct has been completed as required by this act.

In order to provide for the one half of said amount chargeable to the District of Columbia, the Commissioners thereof shall, on the 1st day of July following the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, pay over to the Treasurer of the United States, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $150,000, to be invested by the said Treasurer in interest-bearing bonds of the United States or the District of Columbia, until the full sum of $750,000, as provided herein, shall have been paid.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, were read, and agreed to:

In the first line of the section change the sectional numbering from "7" to "8."

After the word "avenue," in line 19, insert: "Also extending from the north line of New York avenue to the north line of Q street."

Mr. PEARRE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "States," in line 1, page 13, strike out the words "within the said city and west of the east line of Third street," and substitute therefor the following: "on all the lines to be abandoned as aforesaid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this is the section providing an appropriation of a million and a half of dollars. I desire to move to strike out the words "one million five hundred thousand dollars" and put in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars." The words which I propose to strike out appear in lines 16 and 17, on page 14. I wish to be heard a moment on this proposition.

I will say frankly that if members think that my amendment cuts down this amount too much—if any member wants to increase a little the sum named in the amendment—I shall not seriously object, if thereby enough votes may be secured to carry the amendment; but I would like to make as much of a reduction as may be deemed proper and right. To my mind $750,000 seems to be a fair allowance; but if the House thinks the amount ought to be $1,000,000 I will not seriously object to an appropriation of that amount. I have no question, however, that if we pay anywhere near the sum of $1,000,000 we shall pay fully 50 per cent of the cost of these improvements which are properly chargeable to elevations.

From statements made by my colleagues, the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS and Mr. RICHARDSON], it has been understood by some gentlemen that we make no opposition to this bill. I do oppose the bill so long as it includes this appropriation of one million and a half of dollars. I do not pretend to have any knowledge of the cost of this kind of work when extensively done; I might almost say that practically I know nothing about it. But in a small way I have paid 25 cents a yard for excavations, with nothing for filling. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCUDDER] has had considerable experience in these matters and is able to give the House a statement of what is a reasonable charge where the work embraces both excavation and filling. I yield to the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman, what little I have learned from the experience I have had in excavating and filling in ground I am very glad to give to the House. In my section of the country during the last ten years we have constructed upward of 300 miles of macadam roads at a cost exceeding $4,000,000. This work was performed by the county of Queens, in my district, and the roads were built for the purpose of enabling our farmers to come into the city of New York on hard roads built on a grade to save them the burden and expense of hitching to their market wagons four, six, or eight horses in the winter season, as was their practice before these roads were constructed.

Long Island has the reputation of being a flat country. That is true of the ocean or south shore. Its north shore, as we call it, however, is a hilly, rolling country; some hills are said to be as much as 400 feet in height above tide level.

In the construction of these macadam roads it was sought to secure an even grade as near as possible, to accomplish which required the excavation of many hundreds of thousands of yards of soil as well as the filling in of many low places. The work was all done by contract, the contracts being awarded to the lowest bidder. The last contracts we awarded were let upon bids based upon the volume of the work to be done, the bidders having to submit their figures for each class of the work, namely, their price for each square yard of macadam pavement, according to specifications; for each cubic yard of earth excavated to include each cubic yard of earth embankment, and so on for each separate item of the improvement. When taken from the hill the soil excavated had to be carried into the valley and deposited there where embankments were called for. The call for bids provided that the price of carting and depositing the soil excavated must include the cost of the excavation, and the amount bid for this part of the work and for which the contract was let was 19 cents per cubic yard.

I will call the attention of the committee to the fact that in many instances our hauls of this excavated soil were long ones. I can recall some instances where these hauls were fully half a mile, and many of them reached or exceeded a quarter of a mile. In addition to this, we had to travel over filled ground in hauling, making the work more difficult and expensive than hauls over paved streets, as I understand to be the case here.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCUDDER. Certainly.

Mr. SHATTUC. What is the character of the soil in that region?

Mr. SCUDDER. It is largely gravel, sand, and loam. There is not much rock.

Mr. SHATTUC. You say you paid 19 cents a cubic yard for the work?

Mr. SCUDDER. Yes; for each cubic yard excavated and each cubic yard filled, the 19 cents including both.

Mr. SHATTUC. Oh, well, the filling does not amount to anything. You have got to dump it somewhere. So that, in other words, you paid for excavating 19 cents a cubic yard.

Mr. SCUDDER. Yes; including the hauling and filling.

Mr. SHATTUC. The filling does not amount to anything.

Mr. SCUDDER. On the contrary, in our case, it amounted to a great deal, in fact to hundreds of thousands of cubic yards of earth embankment, and a very considerable part of the cost of the construction of our roads, and when you consider the earth excavated often had to be carried the long hauls I have referred to in order to reach the valley or ravine where the earth was to be dumped to bring the road under construction up to grade, all which was agreed to be done and actually done profitably for 19 cents per cubic yard of earth, the value placed on similar work in this bill, namely 70 cents, seems to me excessive.

Mr. SHATTUC. Did you pay for the fill in such cases?

Mr. SCUDDER. No; we paid nothing for the fill. The price, 19 cents, included the excavation and removal of the earth and its hauling and dumping where it was needed to raise the road to grade, or if not needed for that purpose, then to remove it from the line of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were—ayes 37, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend the section by striking out the words "five hundred thousand dollars," so it will stand the sum of $1,000,000. That will leave $1,000,000——

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask a vote.

Mr. COWHERD. Just a word. I do not want to discuss the matter. This will simply put the amount at $1,000,000, which is $250,000 more than we think should be appropriated.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 8, with an amendment changing the section number to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago I said something on the question of damages and the law in force in this District. I cited a case which I now hold in my hand, and that case holds the law to be identically as I stated. It is found in 20 Howard, and is the case of "Smith against The Corporation of Washington." In that case the grade of a street was changed in front of a dwelling owned by Miss

Smith, on K street. Mr. Justice Grier in the opinion held that she could not recover, because there was not a taking of the land. The court said:

Having performed this trust, confided to them by the law, according to the best of their judgment and discretion, without exceeding the jurisdiction and authority vested in them as agents of the public, and on land dedicated to public use for the purposes of a highway, they have not acted "unlawfully or wrongfully," as charged in the declaration. They have not trespassed on the plaintiff's property, nor erected a nuisance injurious to it, and are, consequently, not liable to damages where they have committed no wrong, but have fulfilled a duty imposed on them by the law as agents of the public. The plaintiff may have suffered inconvenience and been put to expense in consequence of such action; yet, as the act of defendants is not "unlawful or wrongful," they are not bound to make any recompense. It is what the law styles "damnum absque injuria." Private interests must yield to public accommodation. One can not build his house on the top of a hill in the midst of a city and require the grade of the street to conform to his convenience at the expense of that of the public.

The law on this subject is well settled, both in England and in this country. The cases are too numerous for quotation; a reference to one or two more immediately applicable to the questions arising in this case will be sufficient.

Then the court cites the case of Callender vs. Marsh (1 Pickering, 417), the case which I cited here a few minutes ago. In that case the court further held, says Justice Grier:

It was held also that the law does not give a right to compensation for an indirect or consequential damage or expense resulting from a right use of property belonging to the public.

In Green vs. The Borough of Reading (9 Watts, 282): The defendants, by virtue of their authority to "improve and repair," graded the street in front of plaintiff's house 5 feet higher than it had been before, and it was held that the corporation was not liable to an action for any consequential injury to plaintiff's property by reason of such improvement or change of grade in the public street.

In the case of O'Connor vs. Pittsburg (18 Penn. Rep., 187) a church had been built according to the direction of the city regulator and by a grade established in 1839. Afterwards, in pursuance of an ordinance, the grade of the street was reduced 17 feet. The church had to be taken down and rebuilt on a lower foundation, at a damage of $4,000. The authority given to the city was "to improve, repair, and keep in order the streets," etc.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am borne out by the authority that I cited, which shows that we are standing here and knowingly passing a law that destroys the ingress and egress to a great number of dwellings out on this road, without making any provision here by statute for protecting these people, a thing which it would be very easy to do in this bill. Whether they are humble or exalted, the abutters should be kept inviolate in their rights. I know that it is useless to offer an amendment, but hope in the future that the "people" will be better protected than this bill does or the majority seems willing now to do. [Applause.]

The Clerk read section 9, with an amendment changing the number to 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

In lines 22 and 23, page 16, after the word "stock," insert the words "not to exceed $5,000,000 fully paid up."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 10, with an amendment changing the number to 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 18, line 17, after the word "Columbia," insert the following:

"Provided, That in every case in which an assessment of damages or an award shall have been returned by the appraisers the company, upon paying into court the amount so assessed or awarded, may enter upon and take possession of the lands and property covered thereby, irrespective of whether exceptions to said assessment or award shall be filed or not, and the subsequent proceedings shall not interfere with or affect such possession, but shall only affect the amount of the compensation to be paid."

The Clerk read section 11, with an amendment changing the number to 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 12, with an amendment changing the number to 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 13, with an amendment changing the number to 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bills S. 1929 and S. 2329, and had directed him to report each of them to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that each of the bills as amended do pass.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the pending bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that each bill should have a separate motion.

Mr. BABCOCK. I make that motion as to the Pennsylvania bill (S. 1929).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the previous question on Senate bill 1929 and the amendments to final passage.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, will that shut off a motion to recommit at the proper time with instructions to the committee?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the right to move to recommit will obtain at the proper stage of the proceedings.

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to be recognized to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments to this bill? If not, they will be submitted to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the committee, with instructions to report it back with such modifications as will provide for the removal of the tracks and buildings of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company from the Mall and the relocation of the depot at some other point.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send up his motion? The gentleman from Missouri moves to recommit the bill with the instructions which the Clerk will report to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit with instructions to report the bill back with such modifications as will provide for the removal of the tracks and buildings of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad from the Mall and the relocation of the depot at some other point.

The question being taken on the motion, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division, Mr. Speaker!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 113.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 72, answered "present" 7, not voting 113; as follows:

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. TATE.

Mr. MESICK with Mr. LENTZ.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky, until January 4, 1901.

For this day:

Mr. LAWRENCE with Mr. BALL.

Mr. TONGUE with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. NEEDHAM with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. LEVY.

On this bill:

Mr. FARIS with Mr. GRIFFITH.

Mr. POWERS with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" inadvertently. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH, and therefore ask to be recorded as "present."

The name of Mr. SIMS was called; and he voted "present."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired generally with my colleague on the committee, Mr. METCALF, of California. I answered "present" under the impression that he was not in the Chamber. I find that he is here, and desire to be recorded in the negative.

The name of Mr. WHEELER was called; and he voted "nay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the Senate bill 2329.

Mr. BABCOCK. On the Senate bill 2329 I ask for the previous question on the pending amendments and the bill to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KLEBERG. The yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Seventeen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. COWHERD. A parliamentary inquiry. Am I entitled to a division? I called for it.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. I called for a division before the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division. The Chair will state that this vote is on the passage of the bill, upon which the gentleman from Missouri demands a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 151, noes 49.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, it being evident that a quorum is present, and the House is in favor of the passage of the bill, I do not desire to delay matters further.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5036. An act granting an increase of pension to Norton Schermerhorn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 5053. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRIGGS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS FROM THE FILES.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ADAMS to withdraw from the files, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Mrs. A. C. Wanger, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon; and

To Mr. BARTHOLDT to withdraw from the files, without leaving copies, papers in the case of James M. Herrington, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

VISITORS TO NAVAL AND MILITARY ACADEMIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes the following announcement of Visitors to the Military Academy and the Naval Academy:

To the Military Academy: Mr. MAHON of Pennsylvania, Mr. LANDIS of Indiana, Mr. HAY of Virginia.

To the United States Naval Academy: Mr. PEARRE of Maryland, Mr. LOUD of California, Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a request from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the letter of December 18, 1900, from the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, addressed to the Committee on Appropriations and submitting additional estimate for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, including the deficiency, be printed as a House document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Chair will state for the information of the House that this becomes necessary inasmuch as the letter was sent directly to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and not through the usual channels of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MARY G. O'BRIEN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a request from the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to refer the papers in the case of Mary G. O'Brien (S. 4734) to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Mobile Harbor, Alabama—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report of preliminary examination of the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 20, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

JOHN P. JONES, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat this day.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF UTAH, MAINE, AND INDIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate three communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of Utah, Maine, and Indiana at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to lie on the table.

EVELYN NEALE MURRAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4184) granting an increase of pension to Evelyn Neale Murray; which was, in line 9, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE WEINHEIMER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3436) granting a pension to Catharine Weinheimer; which was, in line 10, to strike out all after "receiving" down to and including the word "determine" in line 13 and insert:

Provided, however, That in the case of the death of the helpless and dependent child, Caroline Weinheimer, on whose account the pension of Catharine Weinheimer is increased, the pension of said Catharine Weinheimer shall continue only at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said helpless and dependent child.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought that the bill as we passed it contained such a provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. It did, but in different language. The House is very technical as to the use of language, I would say to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

WILLIAM M. FERRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 92) granting a pension to William M. Ferry which was, in line 8, to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1929) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2329) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings of railroads in the District of Columbia, to require and authorize the construction of new terminals and tracks for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 5053) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ELKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5022) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Fall River, Mass.; and

A bill (S. 5023) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at New Bedford, Mass.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report with amendments the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Senator from Connecticut is called to the fact that Senate bill 4300 once passed the Senate, and was sent to the House of Representatives, where all of it, after the enacting clause, was stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to the Committee on Military Affairs was Senate bill 4300, as amended by the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is quite right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And apparently the committee now reports Senate bill 4300.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House struck out the whole of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and passed what was substantially a substitute. We have taken that measure and have amended it. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. We report amendments to the House amendment. It is practically a reconstructed bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut then reports the Senate bill as amended by the House, with amendments?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a recommendation for concurrence, with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That makes a different situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I intended to call attention to the parliamentary status of the bill, which I think is very unusual. The Senate passed a bill and sent it to the House. The House amended it and returned it to the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee reports it back with amendments. Now, if that goes to the Calendar and is passed by the Senate and goes to the House, will it be competent to send it again to the Committee on Military Affairs and report it back here in a different form? If so, there is no end to the matter. It seems to me that the bill is in a bad parliamentary state at the present time and that we are going to get into trouble if we treat an amended Senate bill in this way. I may be wrong about it. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] shakes his head.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no trouble in the world about it. As soon as the Senate passes the bill it will ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the House will either agree or disagree to the request for a conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, of course, makes a different parliamentary situation.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the Senator put it, it was getting into a peculiar condition; but when the committee asks for a conference, that will end it.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senate will be kind enough to pass the bill, I shall be very glad to ask for a committee of conference today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY subsequently said: The rule will not permit the printing of a sufficient number of copies of this bill, and I move that a thousand extra copies of it as proposed to be amended be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5138) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Saginaw, Mich., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2079) granting a pension to William Ashmead, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4956) to grant the Knoxville Power Company the right to dam the Tennessee River at or near Knoxville, Tenn., reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a list of buildings under control of the Treasury Department for which it is necessary, in order to secure their proper completion, that the limit of cost shall be extended by Congress, asked that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was agreed to.

JAMES H. CALDWELL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9266) granting an increase of pension to James H. Caldwell and that the bill be indefinitely postponed, the claimant having died.

The motion was agreed to.

PROGRESS REPORT ON IRRIGATION.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. PERKINS on the 18th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the Progress Report of Cooperative Investigation by the United States Geological Survey and the California Water and Forest Association during the year 1900.

REPORT ON REINDEER IN ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution providing for the printing of Dr. Jackson's report upon the introduction of reindeer into Alaska, to report it favorably with amendments; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on the 6th instant was read, and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into the District of Alaska, for 1900, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 2 to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" in line 5 to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" in line 6 to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" and in line 8 to strike out "six" and insert "three;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into the District of Alaska, for 1900, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What is the total number recommended by the committee to be printed?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Five thousand. The amendments reduce the number one-half.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Printing.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

WILLIAM GORDON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report two pension bills, and as they are both very urgent cases, in which two Senators are interested, I ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration. They will take but a moment. The first one is the bill (S. 5259) granting an increase of pension to William Gordon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William Gordon, late captain Company F, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS HEBEL.

Mr. GALLINGER. The other bill, which is likewise reported without amendment from the Committee on Pensions, is the bill (H. R. 11552) granting an increase of pension to Louis Hebel, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Louis Hebel, late of Company E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTATION OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5258) to allow the commutation of homestead entries in certain cases, to report it without amendment; and I request unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands, reports a bill for which he asks immediate consideration. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, allowing homestead settlers to commute their homestead entries be, and the same hereby are, extended to all homestead settlers affected by or entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the act entitled "An act providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose," approved the 17th day of May, A. D. 1900: Provided, however, That in commuting such entries the entryman shall pay the price provided in the law under which original entry was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have an explanation of it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this is the bill which was reported with reference to but one reservation some days ago by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. There were some attempts to amend that bill at the time, and having attempted to amend it, and possibly thereby obstructed its passage on that day, I have felt called upon to ask now that in its amended form reported from the committee it be put upon its passage.

The bill merely extends the commutation privilege to persons residing upon ceded portion of Indian reservations. The free-home bill exonerated such homestead settlers from the payment of the amounts theretofore prescribed by numerous treaties of cession and acts confirmatory thereof. This allows the settler, after having resided upon the land for fourteen months, to pay $1.25 per acre for the land and get patent, as provided in the homestead law.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS OF COURT OFFICERS IN UTAH TERRITORY.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5231) relating to the accounts of United States marshals and clerks of the district courts of the Territory of Utah, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "accordingly," to insert "and the fees earned in United States cases, and withheld from them, shall be paid to them out of any money not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States marshals and the clerks of the district courts of the Territory of Utah prior to its admission to the Union as a State shall be held accountable only for fees earned in United States cases, in accordance with a decision of the Attorney-General dated December 2, 1891, and all unclosed accounts of such officers shall be settled and closed accordingly, and the fees earned in United States cases and withheld from them shall be paid to them out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUIPMENT FOR SENATE RESTAURANT.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase and place in the kitchen of the Senate restaurant a dish-washing machine, in accordance with the proposition made to the Committee on Rules by the Duparquet, Huot & Moneuse Company, to cost not more than $600, said machine to be paid for from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, when approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

WATER FILTRATION.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN yesterday, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the relative advantages of the so-called mechanical system and of the slow sand system of water filtration for cities; and the necessary expenses of such investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I correctly understand that the investigation is to embrace the slow sand system?

Mr. GALLINGER. The slow sand filtration. There are two systems.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 5330) to extend the privileges provided by an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, as amended; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing a reprint of Senate Document No. 425, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, being the report of the Daughters of the American Revolution; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. THURSTON (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment providing for an Indian agent at the Lemhi Agency, in Idaho, at a salary of $1,200, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment providing for the appointment of two clerks of class 2 instead of one clerk of class 2 in the office of the Director of the Mint, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

LITIGATION IN LABOR TROUBLES.

Mr. THURSTON. I move that the hearings had before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 8917) to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and also the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" as applied to disputes between employers and employees in the District of Columbia and Territories, or engaged in commerce between the several States, District of Columbia, and Territories, and with foreign nations, be printed as a Senate document to accompany the bill (S. 4233) to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and also the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" as applied to disputes between employers and employees in the District of Columbia and Territories, or engaged in commerce between the several States, District of Columbia, and Territories, and with foreign nations. This hearing was had on an important bill, and I desire to have it printed to accompany a similar bill now on our Calendar, reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a small document.

The motion was agreed to.

MONTANA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be discharged from further consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers in connection with the inquiry concerning the appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senators from the State of Montana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution being adopted, if the Senate chooses to do so. It seems to me, however, that it is proper for the Senate to understand the effect of the resolution before voting in favor of it.

On Saturday last a resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers in certain cases was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. On Monday the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] inquired of the acting chairman of the committee why the resolution had not been reported back; and since that time he has offered this resolution to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the statute governing matters of this kind:

Hereafter no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

I should like to have the Senate bear in mind that in case this resolution is adopted and the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, it can not be adopted by the Senate without a violation of the law. That is the only section of the statute so far as I know.

Mr. SPOONER. Then does the Senator mean by that that the Senate is entirely subject to the control of the committee, and that if the committee see fit never to report the Senate's hands would be absolutely tied, no matter what the exigency might be?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I say the Senate is absolutely controlled by the law, and the law is that no resolution of this kind can be adopted without the sanction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If the Senate arbitrarily takes a resolution of this kind out of the hands of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senate can not pass the resolution without violating the law which has been adopted by both Houses and approved by the President, and which is the law of the land. It may be an unwise law, but it is the law.

If, under these circumstances, the Senate chooses to discharge the committee, of course I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter upon the question of the law which the Senator from Arkansas has raised. I think the universal understanding of the Senate has been otherwise. It could not have been expected by anybody that the Senate should be put into the hands of one of its committees, which might refuse to act on a matter which was very important. Suppose there was an expense proposed from the contingent fund to try, if it could be conceived of (I put it merely as a matter of illustration), the Committee on Contingent Expenses for some malefaction, if that could be possible, could that committee arrest the whole inquiry at its will?

But I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the other side of the Chamber, to the simple proposition involved in this resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator means the resolution under consideration proposing to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the former resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I refer to the subject raised by the original resolution. It seems as if there were a likelihood that this might take the form of a political question between the two parties in this Chamber. I do not charge the Senator from Arkansas with any such purpose; I do not suggest any such purpose on his part, and certainly there never has been a political division on such a question heretofore.

Mr. Clark, the Senator who had the credentials from Montana and took his seat, was in his seat. Nobody doubts that. He addressed the Senate after the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections came in. One of his last utterances in that address was to say that he assured the Senate of something, if I recollect right, on his responsibility as a Senator of the United States. He was then de facto, and because de facto de jure, until the Senate had acted otherwise, the Senator from Montana. His vote was as good as mine or that of the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator in the body.

Now, there was in that case no vacancy, as I understand the Constitution and laws. The seat was full. It was rightfully full, subject to the condition subsequent of the action of the Senate holding that he was not lawfully entitled to it. As I understand it, the seat was not then vacant. No action could have been taken by a governor, a lieutenant-governor, or anybody else, to which the existence of a vacancy is a condition, until after his resignation took effect.

That was at a late hour in the afternoon. On the same day, the governor of the State being absent, the lieutenant-governor appointed his successor, declaring that the seat was vacant. As I understand it, that appointment was absolutely null and void if it was made on that day before Mr. Clark resigned. I am told that it was made before Mr. Clark resigned; that it was made and delivered to a son of Mr. Clark early in the day, to take effect after the resignation. There was no vacancy; there was no notice of a future vacancy like that in the Chilton case, and therefore, there having been no appointment after a vacancy, when the governor came back he made one. The gentleman whom the governor undertook to make Senator by that appointment is here demanding his seat, and this committee refuse, if they do refuse, to allow the Senate to see whether the facts presenting that question of law exist or not—whether the vacancy existed before the appointment by the lieutenant-governor or after it.

Now, there may be some Senators here who do not think it makes any difference, or that the doctrine of omnia rite acta præsumuntur makes the presumption conclusive that if two things are done on the same day but one is conclusively presumed to have taken place first, which will give effect to the transaction. But other Senators do not take that view of the law, so we are entitled to know the fact. Does anybody propose, or any party propose, or any association of gentlemen propose to take Mr. William A. Clark on their shoulders as the pious Æneas did Anchises and carry him through all these flames for better or for worse, through good report and evil report, and not allow their associates in the Senate, if they can help it, the ordinary privilege of an investigation before they apply the Constitution and the laws?

It seems to me that that is the whole question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not by any means agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that his statement of the case is the whole question. The question presented for the consideration of the Senate is whether the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate shall be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution. That is the sole question. This, of course, is intended in the nature of a punishment or a rebuke to that committee for having failed to do its duty, if the resolution is adopted at all.

The resolution went to the committee on Saturday last. On Monday the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] called the matter up and inquired of the acting chairman of the committee whether there had been a report, and if not, why not; and he asked him for the reasons given in the committee—given by members of the committee—for their opposition to the adoption of the resolution, if there was such opposition. He further wanted to know why I was not personally present at the meeting of the committee. I had other engagements. It was impossible for me to be there. I advised members of the committee that it was impossible for me to be there, and, as I stated on the floor of the Senate, it was impossible for me to be there on that day or the next day, when I had other engagements which made it impossible for me to be present, but I could be there on Wednesday.

The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], was absent and was telegraphed for by the acting chairman of the committee. He replied to the telegram, asking that the meeting be postponed until to-day, stating that he could be here to-day and that he wanted to be here when the matter came up. He came over from New York, and the committee had a meeting to-day. The matter was up for consideration and discussion, and on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] the further consideration of the resolution was postponed until to-morrow, until such time as the reason for passing the resolution should be understood.

I myself made the point in the committee that the Senate by its own action adjourns to-morrow and will not reassemble until the 3d day of January; that on the 2d day of January, the day before the Senate reassembles, the legislature of Montana assembles, and that that legislature is charged with the responsibility of filling the vacancy to which both Mr. Clark and Mr. Maginnis claim to have been appointed.

Now, it seems to me to be a simple impossibility, if we should adopt the resolution now and should confer authority on the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers to-day, that they should send to Montana for as many people as they want to get; and it would be impossible for any report to be made by that committee, even if the committee should sit during the holidays, until after the meeting of the legislature of Montana, which is charged with the filling of the vacancy.

These are the facts which appeared before the committee, and the committee, not being willing to recommend the expenditure of public money without a reasonable cause, wanted to understand what the facts of the case were.

The resolution has been in the hands of the committee only three or four days at the outside. If the Senate believes that the committee has failed to do its duty and that it should be rebuked, then I think the Senate should adopt the pending resolution. If, on the other hand, the Senate believes that the committee has acted reasonably, the resolution ought not to be adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, this case presents itself in very singular aspects. In the first place, there is no partisanship in connection with the subject on this side of the Chamber. The vacancy in the representation of the State of Montana has certainly existed since the 15th day of May last. Very shortly after Senator Clark retired from the Senate two appointments were made to fill the vacancy. One was made by Lieutenant-Governor Spriggs, of Mr. Clark, who had just vacated the seat. Later Governor Smith telegraphed that the first appointment had been made in collusion and fraud, that he had disregarded it, and had appointed Martin Maginnis.

Now, Mr. President, both William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis are Democrats. Neither is a Republican. Neither has ever been suspected of being a Republican. From the time when these two appointments came into the Senate the Committee on Privileges and Elections has been endeavoring to make an investigation and reach an adjudication on the question if either of these two Democrats should fill the vacancy.

Mr. President, that is the situation. If either of the claimants had been a Republican and I had pursued the case with the same zeal, the Senator from Arkansas would have reproached me with partisanship. Certainly, neither I nor any Senator upon this side of the Chamber can be accused of partisanship because we seek to do the exact duty we owe to the State of Montana, which stands here with only one Senator to represent her interests in this Chamber.

In view of the fact that there is a vacancy and that here are two Democratic claimants to the vacancy, it seems to me that the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber ought to be zealous to have the facts investigated and a determination of the Senate reached whether either of the two claimants shall fill the seat.

In the theory of the law they are outside this door at this minute, asking to come in. I know that Mr. Maginnis, a good and true Montana Democrat, seeks to come in under the appointment of the governor, and, so far as I know, Senator Clark is demanding admission under his credentials from the lieutenant-governor. Is the Senator from Arkansas authorized to disclaim any desire on the part of Senator Clark to fill the present vacancy in the Senate under the appointment of Lieutenant-Governor Spriggs?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no information whatever on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, Mr. President, here they are—two Democratic claimants and a vacancy; and when the Committee on Privileges and Elections undertakes to do its simple duty, from the other side of the Chamber there arises opposition to the investigation.

But, Mr. President, that is not the only singular thing.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit a suggestion, if this is purely a Democratic matter—I do not think so myself, it is higher than that; but if it is purely a Democratic quarrel as between two men and we are going to let in an additional Democrat, the interest of the Senator from New Hampshire appears to be rather extraordinary.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the insinuation that any Republican on this side of the Chamber would not wish to admit another Democrat into this body if he had a lawful right to come should not come from the Senator from South Carolina. There are not Democrats enough here, perhaps, to represent correctly the principles and measures of the Democratic party.

Mr. TILLMAN. I presume the Senator wants to guy some additional Democrats and make them feel sad, as he has done others among us since the last election.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course, the Senator did not mean that there was any disposition on my part to treat this subject as a partisan one. I can have no partisan reason for wanting to make this inquiry. I am doing my simple duty as chairman of the committee. The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Arkansas know it.

Why is it that for the first time in the history of the Senate we have the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate embroiling the Senate on the mere question whether a high and important committee of this body shall have the power to send for persons and papers in order to make an investigation which the Senate by resolution has directed us to make; when the claimants to the seat are outside the door, each one expecting to come in? Mr. President, the like of this objection never has been known in the Senate before.

What was the membership of the Committee on Contingent Expenses up to the recent reorganization of the committee? It consisted of three members. One of them was the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], a Populist, I think; another was the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], a Democrat, and the third was my colleague from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the only Republican upon the committee.

Now the Senator from Arkansas says that the Senate of the United States can not spend one dollar of its contingent fund unless he and the Senator from Nevada consent; that we have made a law to that effect; that we legislated ourselves years ago into the hands of the Jones family and have no possible way to get out of it even for the purpose of finding out whether either of two Democrats is entitled to fill the vacancy in this body when both are knocking at the door and wanting to get in.

Mr. President, it is an absurd construction of the rule. The word "sanctioned" in the law means "considered." That is what every Senator knows it means. The Senator from Arkansas knows that is what it means. It never was intended that any such law should be made as would put the control of the contingent expenses of the Senate absolutely by statute into the hands of a majority of the Committee on Contingent Expenses so that it could not be overruled even by the Senate itself. No law could bind the Senate; the law itself does not bind the Senate. It is a very good rule and it ought to be observed; but it gives the Committee on Contingent Expenses no more authority over the appropriations of this body from the contingent fund of the Senate than the Senate chooses to give it.

Now, Mr. President, the condition of the Contingent Expenses Committee had come to be awkward, and at the last reorganization of the committees of this body two members were added, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], both Republicans, so we have three Republicans to one Democrat and one Populist on the committee. When the resolution first went before that committee, about a week ago, the chairman of the committee being in New York, the Senator from Arkansas, being in town, stayed away from the meeting of the committee, and we have not been able to get a meeting of that committee yet, though the Senator from Nevada is in town, but not within the sacred precincts of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I beg his pardon and the pardon of the Senate for interrupting him to say that we had a very protracted meeting of the committee this morning and reached a conclusion for the present.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the conclusion for the present is not apparent to the Senate. I understand my colleague to mean that the committee think they want further time to consider whether this expenditure should be sanctioned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely, and we are going to have some members, if we can get them, of the Committee on Privileges and Elections appear to state the reasons for this expenditure.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is quite courteous in the committee to try the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I only hope if the Committee on Contingent Expenses succeed in getting the committee to come there that the Committee on Contingent Expenses will not disappear just before the Committee on Privileges and Elections arrive.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have not done so yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think the extraordinary spectacle has ever been witnessed before in the Senate when, in an attempt to fulfill the direct orders of the Senate, a committee ask for the power to send for persons and papers, the Committee on Contingent Expenses determine to summon the Committee on Privileges and Elections before them, to make a case for spending money in order to try and execute the orders of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator what is the use of having a Committee on Contingent Expenses if they have no duties to perform or no rights? The committee this morning made the request to have a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections present to-morrow morning for the purpose of having him make a statement as to why an additional expense in this case should be added to the expenses of the United States when the time is so short between the day we adjourn to-morrow and the meeting of the Montana legislature to fill the vacancy. If this was an emergency case and the Senate desired to make the expenditure, and if one member of the committee would so explain to our committee, we would be perfectly willing to grant it. No man would transact his own business in a way different from that, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, answering the Senator from West Virginia, I would not undertake to say that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has not been or ought not to be a useful committee of this body. I am glad that the committee is giving closer attention to its subjects. I am glad that the committee has been enlarged, and that hereafter the committee proposes to investigate propositions to expend money from the contingent fund. The Senator from Arkansas knows that that is my view of the case, and I congratulate the Senator from West Virginia because, joining the committee, he raises the question in this case.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHANDLER. The point I make is that it is very inconvenient to have the Committee on Contingent Expenses, for the first time in the whole history of the Senate, give the attention it is now giving to this question of high privilege. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator, if it be true that the Senate can not make an investigation, however important the Senate regards it, without the consent of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, whether it would not be wise to enlarge still further the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses so as to take in the Senate? Why not liberate ourselves from this apparent thraldom in that way?

Mr. BACON. You would have to change the law.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the law requires any change. I have never so understood it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have no deep feeling on this subject and I have no criticisms to make of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. They followed the custom and practice of the Senate, which has not been a good one. What I do not like is to have this new rule adopted now and placed, not upon me and the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, but put upon the Senate itself, which has ordered this inquiry.

If the Committee on Contingent Expenses thought there was not time to make the inquiry, then they might have reported back the resolution with the suggestion to the Senate that there is not time to make the inquiry. The course that the committee is pursuing is simply the taking of responsibility by the committee for defeating an investigation which the Senate has directed shall be made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire can throw some light on this question if he will let the Senate know what was the cost of the examination made by his committee on this very Clark case last spring. The witnesses from Montana were in the corridors of the Capitol upstairs by the hundred or thousand; I do not know how many. It is a good many miles from here out there. It costs a good deal to bring men from Montana here to be examined, and all that kind of thing. The Montana legislature will act, as the Senator from West Virginia has just said, on the whole subject in a very short while. We are so careless about economy here that it does look to me like there might be some merit in the idea of the Committee on Contingent Expenses taking a little hand in this matter themselves and not let the Senator from New Hampshire have full leeway on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it costs about $250 to get a witness from Montana here, but it would require very few witnesses to demonstrate the facts.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator, if the accounts have been made up, how much did the other investigation cost?

Mr. CHANDLER. Thirty or forty thousand dollars.

Mr. TILLMAN. What benefit was it to the country?

Mr. HOAR. Very great.

Mr. CHANDLER. The vacant seat in the Senate from Montana answers that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says the benefit was very great, but it seems that notwithstanding the investigation the State of Montana has gone Democratic, that the result has not been what was anticipated, and the fruit has not been as sweet as some people imagined it would be.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment.

The Senator from South Carolina, in making the suggestion which he has, invites a debate, which I am not inclined to enter into. I am not before the Senate here and now to argue the merits of the case which was tried before the Committee on Privileges and Elections at such length and such expense.

The Senator from South Carolina seems to think we should investigate bribery in connection with a Senatorial election if it is near by and does not cost much, but that if the crime of bribery in the election of a Senator is perpetrated 2,000 miles away and it costs a good deal to investigate it, we should not touch it. That is the force and sense of the remark of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, that is not the burden of my argument. It is simply the uselessness of this apparent persecution of a man. I have no sympathy with the methods of Mr. Clark, if the charges which were published in the newspapers against him last year were proven.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator asks what good the investigation did. He demands to know that of me, and is introducing an old subject into the debate; but it has nothing more to do with it than the question how we shall make the next apportionment of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. If this be a mere matter of law, a constitutional question, according to the statement of the Senator, why can not the Senate settle it without any further investigation?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate instructed the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make this inquiry, and the question now is whether the Senate will follow that up by giving the committee the authority which they ask for.

I am not going into a discussion of the Clark case. I should be perfectly willing to do so, but Senators would justly rebuke me if I did. However, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who is in his seat, will be perfectly willing to discuss, if the Senator from South Carolina wants him to do so, the recent Montana election and the way in which the Democratic victory, of which the Senator from South Carolina has taken occasion to boast in this Chamber, was obtained, but I do not intend to debate that question.

Mr. SCOTT and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I presume I was selected to go upon the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate because I was a business man and would examine questions coming before the committee from a business standpoint. The first time I had ever met with the committee was on this case. I thought I had a right to know the reason why the Senate was to spend this money. If I am mistaken, of course I want to apologize; but I do think if that committee has been created for any purpose at all it was to supervise and to inquire into the expenditure of money. If it has not been, I have been mistaken in what I conceive to be my duty.

If the Senator from New Hampshire and the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections show that they want this investigation—that they can take the subject up and conclude it before there is an election in Montana, and that it is proper and right to expend two or three or four thousand dollars in order to get at the truth—whenever I am satisfied that that is the thing to do I certainly shall vote for that expenditure; otherwise I shall not do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from West Virginia is quite right about the duties of his committee. I concur in his statement upon that subject, and I venture to say that the committee has been very much strengthened by the addition of the Senator from West Virginia as a member of it.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I myself welcome, Mr. President, the advent in the committee of the new method of performing its functions.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina next.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that I would not have brought up the subject or had anything to say about the recent Montana election had it not been for the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections had accomplished a great deal. So far as I am concerned, I have never read any of the testimony taken before the committee. I only know that the committee was engaged here by the week and almost by the month, every day, with an army of witnesses, and that the newspapers were full of nauseating details of charges of bribery, and all that kind of thing. I never read the testimony, and never expect to read it.

The only practical issue here in connection with the recent Montana election is whether there was sufficient fraud in that election to invalidate the action of its legislature whenever it does act. I think it is premature for us to enter upon an investigation of the recent election until the legislature sends a Senator here—I mean as the result of that election—to claim a seat. When that occurs, then it will be time to begin a new investigation upon the last election instead of reopening the investigation of a previous election.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then why did the Senator introduce any reference to the new and recent election in Montana?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should not have introduced it except for the reason I have stated, that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] referred to it. I merely threw out the suggestion that, so far from defeating the man who had been charged with bribery, the State had gone Democratic.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TILLMAN. I would yield with pleasure if I had the floor, but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is in possession of the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], if I understood him, inquired what good the investigation last winter of the claim of the then Senator from Montana to a seat here did; to which I replied from my seat, "Very great." What happened, as I understand it, is this: There was a charge that a man worth as many million dollars as counted in thousands would make some of us think ourselves pretty rich men had purchased, or that his friends had purchased, the entire majority of the legislature of a young State; and without being agreed as to all the details, the committee unanimously held that that fact was proved, not by the committee bringing home guilt to the Senator claiming the seat, but bringing it home to somebody; and for that reason the Senator was not entitled to a seat in the Senate.

I am very sure of the assent of my friend from South Carolina, who, however I may differ with him in regard to policies, I know would not spend or sanction the expenditure of a sixpence for corruption in any public or private matter, and would rather cut off his right hand than do it—I am very sure of his assent to my proposition, that to prevent the perpetration of such a crime is a great public good.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. STEWART addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. TILLMAN. Permit me to answer the Senator from Massachusetts. I thank the Senator for his opinion in regard to my own purity of purpose here, and I wish to say that, so far as I can understand the report of that committee, after the investigation I was prepared, if necessary, to vote to unseat Mr. Clark, but when we come down to the practical results of the investigation we find that the exposure—if you did expose to the satisfaction of the people of Montana the fact that corrupt practices had been used there and that that legislature had been debauched—resulted in nothing more than a Democratic victory. Now, if that be true—what influences were brought to bear I do not know—I do not think that Montana politics have been purified by any investigation we have had, and no practical good has resulted. The recent election could be considered as a repudiation by the people of Montana of the charges made against Senator Clark.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not agree that the Democratic victory was a great public good? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The Democratic victory in Montana?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would not give a snap of my fingers whether or not Montana went Democratic last time, after we lost the Presidential election. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senate has a special order for 3 o'clock. I am very reluctant to interrupt this debate, but I feel that I must make a motion that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not made the motion. I want to say to him that, as I am a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I think I ought to be permitted the right to make a statement before he makes the motion, and I think he will agree with me on that point.

Mr. LODGE. I will certainly not press the motion until the Senator from New Hampshire shall have an opportunity to make his statement, but then I give notice that I must make the motion in justice to other Senators.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1929) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes, which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think it necessary to read all the amendments of the House of Representatives. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. BERRY. I did not hear the motion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not believe this bill ought to pass at all, but I want to examine and discuss the amendments. I ask either that the bill go over or that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have moved that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is what I object to—disagreeing to the amendments of the House of Representatives and asking for a committee of conference. I want to examine the amendments. Perhaps we ought to agree to them, but I do not believe the bill ever ought to pass. It appropriates between 11 and 12 acres of a park for railroad purposes. I do not believe the people living in that locality favor any such proposition or that such an appropriation ought to be made. I want an opportunity to examine the amendments and discuss them before they go to a committee of conference.

I move to refer the bill and amendments to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who desired, on the part of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to make a personal explanation. I can not possibly withhold my motion for a debate on the Pennsylvania Railroad bill; I can not do so in justice to other Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the leave of the Senate, the Chair will withdraw the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to having it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and printed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill and amendments be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and printed, in the absence of objection.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2329) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings of railroads in the District of Columbia, to require and authorize the construction of new terminals and tracks for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the city of Washington, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MONTANA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER, proposing to discharge the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate from the further consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers in connection with the inquiry concerning the appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senator from the State of Montana.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a personal explanation, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] inadvertently suggested, but for the purpose of calling attention to the status of the question that has been so earnestly and warmly discussed.

On Saturday last a resolution, which proposed to take from the contingent fund an indefinite sum of money, was referred to that committee. In the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], I was acting chairman of the committee by a vote of the committee. I called a meeting of the committee for Monday. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] advised us in advance of his inability to be present, and requested that no action should be taken, saying to the committee that the earliest moment at which he could attend would be on Wednesday. I then called a meeting of the committee for Wednesday morning. In the meantime I had telegraphed to the chairman of the committee, who was in New York, unavoidably absent attending a sick daughter, that his presence was desired. He responded by wire that he could not be here until this morning. I consulted the other members of the committee, and we unanimously agreed that it was the proper and courteous thing to postpone the meeting until this morning; which we did. This morning we held a meeting, and I will state in a moment the conclusion that was reached.

I have been a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate for a good while, and I have performed a good deal of clerical work as a member of that committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In view of the statement made by the Senator's colleague, I ask if the Senator will state how many members of the committee were present at the hearing to-day?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say they were all present.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I have performed a great deal of clerical work, both here and at my home, as a member of that committee, but I never have supposed the committee was simply a committee of clerks. I supposed we had some power, some jurisdiction over something beyond the mere matter of writing our names on the backs of bills which were perfunctorily approved, or of going and asking the financial clerk of the Senate whether or not there was any money in the contingent fund. I have taken it for granted that we had other powers beyond that. I came to that conclusion and investigation from reading Rule XXV.

Mr. SPOONER. On what page?

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 21 of the Standing Rules of the Senate. That rule provides for the appointment of various committees—a Committee on Appropriations, a Committee on Finance, a Committee on Pensions, a Committee on the Census, a Committee on Coast Defenses, a Committee on the District of Columbia, etc.

It is further provided that to these committees shall be referred matters relating to the subjects that they are to consider; but no one would for a moment contend that those committees must approve and report back favorably all matters referred to them.

Then, a Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is provided for, as follows:

> A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of three Senators—as the rule originally provided, but the number has been enlarged to five—> to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

I have never supposed that that committee was different from the other committees of this body. The Committee on Appropriations receives bills that are sent to it and approves or disapproves them; the Committee on the District of Columbia does the same; the Committee on Pensions does the same; and I supposed the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate had a right to inquire into the advisability of appropriating money from the contingent fund for certain matters, whether for the appointment of special committees or otherwise.

I want to say here that matters have come to that committee which have not been approved. Resolutions have come there providing for the appropriation of money out of the contingent fund that have been asked by standing committees of this Senate, and the Committee on Contingent Expenses has not approved the propositions and the Senate has not voted the money, so that this is not entirely a new proposition, so far as the action of the committee is concerned. In addition to that provision of the rule, Mr. President, we have a statute governing the action of this committee, and it is the only committee of this body that is governed by statute. That statute reads:

Hereafter no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The statute goes on further to say that no money shall be paid—from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives unless sanctioned by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I am not going to insist that I myself know what the word "sanction" means, but I go to the Standard Dictionary for my information, and I find that it says:

Sanction: 1. To approve authoritatively; render valid by assent or concurrence; confirm; ratify; to give consent or support to; regard with favor or approval; countenance, etc.

Now, Mr. President, if the word "sanction" means anything different from that, I should be glad if some Senator would tell me what it does mean, and I want to appeal to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is an authority on the use of language, as to what construction he would put on the word "sanction" in the law governing the action of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, if he chooses to make the statement.

Mr. HOAR. I should be glad to do so if my colleague would permit, but he has a motion pending.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have the floor, and I do not think I can be taken from it.

Mr. LODGE. I yielded the floor to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly; and I have it.

Mr. HOAR. I would say to the Senator that I would like three or four minutes to make the statement, but I do not think I ought to do so at this precise time, in view of the motion which my colleague desires to press. I will do so, however, very soon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I will waive that, of course. The Senator is privileged to make it or not.

That is my construction of the meaning of the word "sanction," and I am confirmed in that by very good authority, which I have quoted.

Mr. President, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate met this morning, with all the members of the committee present, presided over by the chairman of the committee. Personally I was very happy to have him there, because I have not felt like taking any special responsibility in this matter, and indeed it is very distasteful to me to say a single word on the subject. We went over this subject with considerable care. It is not a partisan question so far as the committee is concerned; certainly not so far as I am concerned. I am not here to say a word in criticism of the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the conclusion they reached in the so-called Clark case; neither am I here to say anything offensive to Mr. Clark, who was a member of this body, and with whom I served on two committees; but I do want to say that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has approached this matter in a nonpartisan spirit for the purpose of simply doing their duty.

If all the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has to do as a committee is to inquire of Mr. Nixon, the financial clerk, whether there is money in the contingent fund, I want to retire from that committee, because I can use my time to much better advantage than that. A clerk or a messenger can do that quite as well as five Senators.

The committee, after very careful consideration of the question, came to the conclusion that it was important to ascertain, first, the necessity for this expenditure. They concluded that it could be ascertained by asking some member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make a statement to the committee, and in the next place to ascertain what construction of this rule was placed upon it by the other body, the other body having a committee called the Committee on Accounts, which has precisely the same jurisdiction over the contingent fund of the House as the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has over the contingent fund of the Senate. That is all there is to it.

The committee adjourned to meet to-morrow. What action will be taken to-morrow I can not say. I shall not be able to be present at the meeting, as I propose to leave the city early in the morning; but I do wish to say that the committee, so far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for the committee as a committee—have no disposition whatever to dodge or to evade this question; but they have had a disposition to perform their duty and exercise their prerogative as a standing committee of the Senate, and not to have a matter railroaded over their heads simply because somebody wants to have passed a resolution that is properly in the hands of the committee and which is receiving consideration. If the Senate chooses to take it out of the hands of the committee that is the business of the Senate, and the committee, I am sure, will bow very gracefully to any decision the Senate may reach in regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold that motion for five seconds, to the end that I may address myself to this question.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order. This whole debate is in violation of an agreement of the Senate. It is not the business that we anticipated was to take place in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). Unless the Senator from Massachusetts yields, the Chair must put his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield? If not, the Chair will be obliged to put the question on his motion.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me.

Mr. LODGE. If I may be allowed to say a word, as I have the floor, I believe——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Everybody else is talking, and I am a little doubtful whether I have the floor or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, it is very apparent that this debate will go on from one point to another. I do not want to interfere with any Senator who desires to speak upon the pending question; but I am charged with carrying out the agreement of the Senate, and I do not feel that I ought to withhold the motion for an executive session.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask the Senator what the agreement is to which he refers?

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. There was a special order to vote at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARTER. I have requested the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And he has refused, as the Chair understands.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator, of course, for a question.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts in what particular the present proceeding is violating any unanimous-consent agreement or order of business?

Mr. LODGE. Because it was understood that we should go into executive session immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business. This debate has carried us on until now it is twenty minutes before 2 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. It has gone on for more than an hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is part of the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I request that the further consideration of this resolution may be postponed until after the executive session this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the present question be postponed until after the conclusion of the executive session this afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, I will ask the Senate to take up for consideration the House amendment to Senate bill No. 4300, to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 21, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 20, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I was present on yesterday, but was paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HAWLEY, but I am noted as not present.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman answer "present?"

Mr. GAINES. No, sir; but I was here, though.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will get the benefit of his statement, and the RECORD will show it. It is not a matter for correction of the Journal.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was present and voted present. I was paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'GRADY, and I would like that fact noted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman; there was so much confusion in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. On yesterday I voted present on the passage of the bill, being paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'GRADY, and I would like the pair noted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was marked "present," as the Chair understands.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I was present, but I wish the pair noted.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman's pair noted the day before?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. No; it was not.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will be made to show the situation.

Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 12904) making appropriations for the Indian service for the next fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 12904 (the Indian appropriation bill), and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have had no request from this side of the House, and my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], the senior member of the minority of the committee, has had none on that side, for general debate. I wish to say but a single word in explanation of the bill before asking that we proceed with the reading of it by sections.

The bill carries appropriations aggregating in round numbers a little over three-fourths of a million dollars more than the same bill for last year. The main items of increase are one million and a half of dollars appropriated under the provisions of the Kiowa treaty which was ratified at the last session of Congress, and also an appropriation of $425,000 to carry out the provisions of the treaty with the Fort Hall Indians, which treaty was also ratified at the last session of Congress.

The amount appropriated for schools is substantially the same as was appropriated last year. The amount appropriated for gratuitous support is less by a trifle—$20,000 or $30,000—than it was last year. The various changes, the increases and decreases from last year's appropriations and from the estimates for this year, are indicated in the report, copies of which will be found at the desk. The bill carries appropriations amounting to $200,000 less than the estimates.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest to the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] that while this sum of $1,500,000 is appropriated, no part of it is to be paid out. It is simply deposited in the Treasury and remains there for the benefit of these Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and that is true also of the $425,000. It is simply deposited in the Treasury with other Indian funds, and interest at the rate of 5 per cent is paid to the Indians for their support. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], suggests to me that as a matter of fact the money paid out of the Treasury will be less by nearly a million dollars than it was last year.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to certain matters. In the Indian appropriation bill of last year—I mean the bill passed at the first session of this Congress—it was provided that—

Hereafter the clerks of the district courts in the Indian Territory shall account for and pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected in excess of $1,000 per year; all settlements to be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Attorney-General may prescribe.

Now, that provision changed existing law in regard to the fees and allowances of clerks in the Indian Territory. The clerk of that district made to me a statement which I will ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks, without taking time to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to printing the statement in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

Statement of conditions now existing in the United States clerk's office for the northern district of the Indian Territory.

The act of May 31, 1900, Indian appropriation bill, providing that the clerks of the United States courts of the Indian Territory account for and pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees earned in excess of $1,000, makes the net income to said clerks (with the additional salary of $3,000 allowed by law) $4,000 per annum.

The act above referred to does not carry with it any provisions for the maintenance of said office, such as additional clerk hire, record books, stationery, and traveling expenses of said clerks in their attendance upon court, which are all necessary expenses.

Under the present conditions the clerk of the northern district is receiving $4,000 per annum and expending $4,400 for the maintenance of his office, as follows, to wit: For necessary clerk hire, $3,600; for books and stationery, $400; for traveling expenses in attendance on courts, $400; making a net loss of $400 per annum.

Under the provision as proposed the compensation and expenses per annum will be as follows, to wit: Salary allowed by law, $3,000; fees to be retained, $7,000 per annum; making the total compensation of $10,000 per annum. Expenditures as follows, to wit: Additional clerk hire, $3,600; record books and stationery, $400; traveling expenses, $400; making the annual expenses $4,400 and leaving a net compensation to said clerk of $5,600 per annum.

CHAS. A. DAVIDSON,
Clerk United States Court.

Mr. RAY of New York. The clerk stated to me that under the provision to which I have referred he is paying out $400 more than he is receiving under the provisions of the existing law, and he gave the items of his expenditure.

I have had some conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SHERMAN] in which he has stated he intends to correct that error, or he thinks that he has done so. I sent the gentlemen who called on me to the chairman of that committee, and I suppose some provision on this subject has been made. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what correction of this matter he has made in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the change in the statute relating to these clerks was made upon the appropriation bill last year on the written representation of certain United States officials in the Indian Territory that the compensation received by the clerks under the then existing statute was excessive. Being satisfied of the correctness of that statement we changed the law. The clerks came to Washington at the beginning of this session, and first visited my colleague [Mr. RAY of New York], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee—which it was perfectly proper for them to do—and after consultation with him, and after hearing these clerks and looking over with care their written statement, which I have here and which I will more fully explain when we reach that section in the bill, if it be desired, we propose in this bill to amend the act of last year so as to provide what we believe, from the officers themselves and from the statements of others conversant with the conditions and the facts down there, will give them fair compensation and a reasonable sum of money for the disposition of the business of their courts in a proper way. The provision is found on page 34 of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. What line?

Mr. SHERMAN. Line 22.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is the gentleman satisfied that that will correct the matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that. It fixes the clerks' compensation at a fair if not generous amount, with ample funds to pay all the contingent expenses of their offices. It does not give them by a considerable sum the same compensation they were receiving before the enactment of last year.

Mr. RAY of New York. I am willing to concede that before the provision of last year their pay was too large and that there should be a reduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very substantial reduction, and yet is an increase over the provisions of the last year's law.

Mr. RAY of New York. Could you give to the House the probable compensation these officials will receive under this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. The compensation, in my judgment, from the statements made to us by the clerks, and which I hold in my hand, would be somewhere from $3,000 to $5,000, probably nearer $4,000 and not over $5,000.

Mr. CURTIS. And under this provision they will return to the Treasury about $3,500 a year on the average.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman what changes are made in existing law by this bill. Are any made?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, there are some.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman please state what they are?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will send for a copy of the report, or examine the bill, he will find them set forth fully in both.

Mr. RAY of New York. And the matter discussed by the chairman of the committee and myself for the last five minutes is also a change in existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; it is one of these provisions.

Mr. RAY of New York. But it is one of those matters that ought to be corrected here——

Mr. CURTIS. It is for the purpose of righting a wrong done to these clerks in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. And under this statement of facts.

Mr. RAY of New York. Unquestionably, and the wrong ought to be righted.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I was not present when this section was considered in the committee. But I call the attention of the gentleman to the words on page 35, line 7—and ask him what the meaning is in that connection?

all other fees—

Mr. SHERMAN. That means the provision for fees they receive for filing chattel mortgages, issuing marriage certificates, and so on. We mean the fees arising from such official acts as I have stated, and the like, which are required to be performed by the clerks of the courts of the Indian Territory and not by United States clerks elsewhere.

Mr. LACEY. What do you mean by "the like of that?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I mean fees arising from the recording of chattel mortgages, issuing marriage licenses or certificates, and so on.

Mr. LACEY. Does not the gentleman think that more satisfaction would result by requiring the payment of all fees into the Treasury Department and let the allowances be paid by the Department to these officials?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was part of our bill of last year. That seems to have been unsatisfactory, and the statement of the clerks is that under that provision useless labor was given them in the first place; and secondly, it reduced their pay to a figure where, as a matter of fact, they had perhaps been performing services since the 31st of last May without compensation at all. It took all the money that they received to pay the running expenses of the offices.

Mr. LACEY. Of course, that is not right.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly not.

Mr. LACEY. But we have been over the whole question in the reform bill, considered by the Judiciary Committee, as to the fees of clerks and marshals in other matters. It strikes me that here is an entering wedge to open up the same vice in the Indian Territory. Now, it seems to me that it would be very much better that they should pay all the money into the Treasury and then have a reasonable allowance made to them for expenses.

Mr. CURTIS. Do you think fees should be paid into the Treasury which are collected by the clerks for performing duties which other clerks are not required to perform under the law?

Mr. LACEY. There is no work done there not required by law.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true; but there is a great deal of work performed by the clerks in the Indian Territory which other United States clerks are not required to perform.

Now, instead of establishing new offices and paying for the work that must be done, the law requires it to be done by the clerks of the district courts, such as issuing marriage licenses, recording chattel mortgages, and matters of that kind; also, certain probate work, which is done by the probate judges in other parts of the country. These men certainly ought to have some compensation for performing work of that character. The committee thought it proper to modify the law of last year, which seemed to have been enacted by mistake. It was an injustice to the clerks. If the present law is not changed, the clerks will be compelled to perform work not required of other clerks throughout the country.

Mr. LACEY. The point I wish to make, and I would like time to discuss the matter——

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa such time as he may desire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How much is paid to these clerks under this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Three thousand dollars, and the other clerks of the United States district courts receive three thousand five hundred.

Now, it is estimated that the salary allowed by law, $3.000, and the extra fees they retain will pay them between three thousand five hundred and four thousand dollars. One of them may perhaps get a little over $4,000 and one will receive something less. That is according to the showing made to our committee, and which we believe to be correct.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do these men who receive $3,000 do as much as those who receive $3,500?

Mr. CURTIS. They perform much more work.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. What is the reason for giving larger salary instead of continuing the fees?

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the gentleman that it will only be for a short time. The Territory will be provided with registers and probate judges within a short time, and we thought that until that time comes we might still continue the practice.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will it require the matter to wait until the Territory becomes a State?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not. The Territory may be attached to a State or counties may be organized.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, when we find clerks of Territorial courts coming to Washington and asking that indefinite fees be allowed to them without accounting for them for the performance of certain or uncertain duties, I always look upon the proceeding with grave suspicion, and especially in the light of the examination and the consideration of the general fee question in the Federal courts of both the marshals' and clerks' fees in a preceding Congress. We attempted to dig this whole matter up, root and branch, and allow no feed officers either in the clerk's or in the marshal's office, as had been the practice.

Mr. CURTIS. When this bill was passed, these clerks and other officers of the Indian Territory thought the law was not meant to apply to them, because they were then performing extra work and it could not last but a very few years longer.

Mr. LACEY. They got out of this provision at that time. They came down here to look after their fees. They seem to be active officials, and have been able to come to Congress and look after their fees. We can provide for these officers who ought to have something for extra work. If they are doing something that a clerk ought not to do, they ought to be paid for it. But we ought not to enlarge it in this indefinite way. We do not know what the fees will amount to. They may be $10,000 a year and they may only run to $4,000. It ought to be drafted in such a way as that no injustice would be done, and it certainly should not be done in this way on the Indian appropriation bill. Therefore, when the bill is read, I shall feel constrained to make the point of order against it.

Mr. CURTIS. If you raise the salaries of these clerks at this time to $3,500 or $4,000, when the time comes when they are not required to perform this extra service how are you going to have the salaries reduced? It will be almost impossible to do so.

Mr. LACEY. That is a thing for another Congress to determine. There is no reason why this should be made by an indefinite allowance of fees, perhaps $10,000, for fear we will not be able to cut it down; and I am not willing that they should have this indefinite provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, he indicates that when we reach this point of the bill he will make a point of order. Of course, if he does so, the Chair will be constrained to hold the point of order good. But before that is done my colleague will have ample time to read this communication from the clerks and will see that under the existing law they have no reasonable compensation for their services. I hope my colleague will frame an amendment in accordance with his present opinion, and rather than strike the whole matter out offer an amendment that will reach the matter, for I know that he does not want to do anybody an injustice. I think by striking it out entirely he will be doing an injustice, whereas it is quite within his power to frame an amendment within the lines of his idea and still give these men a compensation such as would be fair.

Mr. LACEY. I would be very averse to dissenting from the committee of which I am a member, especially when I make no minority report. But upon this question of fees I have such pronounced convictions, and have spent so much time upon it and seen the House wrestling with it for so many years, and have seen the matter eliminated practically from the Federal courts, that I do not feel willing now to take a step backward upon this question by inserting anything of the kind in an appropriation bill. But I think that the matter can be arranged. I believe an amendment may be made that the House would waive the point of order on and that would do justice to the clerks on the one hand without the House reversing its action upon the reform bill as to fees in the Federal courts.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman's permission, I want to make a suggestion there. This whole question of fees for clerks in the Indian Territory was gone over and established prior to the meeting of this Congress, and there was a general statute on the subject, under which the clerks in the Indian Territory had their fees and compensation.

Mr. LACEY. They were excused and relieved from the reform bill on the theory that the arrangement in Indian Territory was a temporary one at best, and to wait until there was a permanent organization.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, certain representations were made to the Committee on Indian Affairs, from which this bill comes, and that committee at the first session of this Congress, without any particular investigation that I have heard of, and certainly without any consultation with the Judiciary Committee, who have general charge of the matters of fixing the fees, etc., made a correction, or something that they supposed was a correction, something that they intended for a correction, that would make the compensation just and proper. It is a provision in an appropriation bill, and as it does injustice to the clerks the error should be corrected.

Now, that provision has stood upon the statute books since the enactment of that bill—about six months, as I understand it—and the clerk finds that after paying the necessary expenses of his office and after paying his assistants he is $400 "in the hole," so to speak. That is, he pays out $400 more than he gets. Now, that is an injustice. There is no question about that, and he ought to have reasonable pay. That is all this bill undertakes to do—to correct that to some extent.

Mr. LACEY. To give him the fees without limit?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no, it does not give him the fees without limit.

Mr. LACEY. All "other fees" without limit?

Mr. SHERMAN. All other fees, but we know what those fees are.

Mr. LACEY. They are indefinite. No one knows what they are or what they will be.

Mr. SHERMAN. The aggregate of fees are indefinite, but we know what they have been.

Mr. LACEY. Nothing is so indefinite as a fee that does not have to be accounted for. It is like the weight of a man's hand when he is using that weight for a pound. Put a clerk in a position where he fixes the fees for himself and he will lie awake at nights to imagine new methods of taxation, but if the fees go to the Government they will be reasonable.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then why not frame your amendment in some way so that the clerks will account to the Government for all these fees, and let them adjust it on a certain basis?

Mr. SHERMAN. Put them on the same basis that other United States clerks are upon. Other United States clerks receive all of their fees up to $3,500, and then they have the right to draw to a certain limit above that for the expenses of their offices. At least let these men, who perform services greater than other United States clerks, receive as much as other United States clerks.

Mr. LACEY. There is no doubt that it is perfectly proper that this should be done. What I object to is the indefinite method.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, before we reach that, let the gentleman draw his amendment so that these clerks will receive some compensation. They are practically working now without any pay. The gentleman might put it in the language of the other bill, only change the figures.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, with the greatest pleasure in the world.

Mr. GAINES. How much do these clerks get under the present law?

Mr. SHERMAN. Their statement is that they get $400 less than nothing.

Mr. GAINES. What is the fact?

Mr. SHERMAN. The law allows them $3,000, but when they come to pay all the expenses that they are obliged to pay, they have received, as they state in writing, since the 1st of last May or the 1st of June, when this act went into effect, nothing for their services, and have paid out $400 more than they have received.

Mr. GAINES. What change do you propose?

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee's proposition was to give them certain fees that are collected on matters that ordinarily are outside of the duties of a United States clerk. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who was not satisfied with that, was that there should be some different arrangement, and I have suggested to him that he draw a provision along the lines of his idea, but which will give these clerks a compensation, say, of $3,500 a year, the same as other United States clerks receive.

Mr. GAINES. No more than that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not my proposition; but I think they ought to have something more, as they perform other service.

Mr. GAINES. What are they going to do outside of the usual duties of United States clerks?

Mr. SHERMAN. They mainly record and file chattel mortgages and issue marriage certificates, and there are a very large number of them, so many that the fees from them amount to three or four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. GAINES. And the proposition now is to give them all they can make in this outside work?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; the proposition is that they take these fees and not account for them, but that out of them they pay the additional clerk hire and that they pay for stationery, traveling expenses, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. GAINES. And not account for it?

Mr. SHERMAN. And not account for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to a bill with which he is familiar, and I want to make a request of him during his time.

During the last session of the House I introduced a bill, which I hold in my hand, which passed the House and passed the Senate of the United States. It was a bill to appropriate two thousand six hundred dollars and odd to pay for certain Choctaw orphan Indian lands in the State of Mississippi. That was the first section of it. I will ask the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am listening.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And the second section was to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to dispose of these lands in the same way that he disposes of all other public lands which are part of the public domain.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the bill passed both Houses, and in the Senate the gentleman who was taking care of it did not know that the bill was passed, and he got the appropriation on the general appropriation bill at the same time, and then, just at the last of the session, one night when I was not present, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], discovering that there had been a duplication of the appropriation, made a request that the bill be sent back by the President to the House. The consequence is that the first section of the bill has become a law, appropriating the money to pay for the Choctaw orphan Indian lands, but the second section has never become a law, and although the United States has paid for the land, the Commissioner has not the authority to dispose of the land.

Now, I want to make a request of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to permit section 2 of the bill to go upon this appropriation bill, to which it is perfectly germane, and in that way this desired legislation will have been accomplished.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I shall ask the gentleman at the proper time to offer it as an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi to do it, but I shall raise no point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think no point of order could lie; it is perfectly germane. I wanted to explain it in the open House because I think the gentleman from New York misunderstood it at the last session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not understand it at the time the way the gentleman from Mississippi has stated it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the Clerk may read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, reading the bill, read as follows:

At the Sac and Fox Agency, Okla., $1,200.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, in that connection I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert in line 22, page 4, after the word "dollars," the following: "At the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, $1,000."

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee was unanimous, Mr. Chairman, in omitting the Sac and Fox Agency from the bill, although it was estimated for originally this year. When the subcommittee was at the Indian Office going over the bill in detail with the Commissioner, his statement to us was that various agencies could be dispensed with, and we have in this bill provided appropriations for eight less agencies than we appropriated for last year, and one was the Sac and Fox Agency. It was dispensed with for the reason that the superintendent of schools there could discharge the duties of the agent, and the Commissioner has a right to call upon him to do it.

Mr. CURTIS. There are only 420 Indians there.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the chairman of the committee as to the ultimate necessity, or propriety, of this action, but I think it is premature, for this reason. This Sac and Fox tribe in Iowa are blanket Indians and have refused civilization; and there has been a great deal of trouble in getting the Indians into the schools at all. I think in the course of a few years, possibly another year, the purpose of the chairman would be a good one. At the present time, however, there is great friction about that school. The Indians refuse to go to school, and habeas corpus was sued out by parents of some of the children, and the matter was placed in the courts and litigation ensued as to whether the parents of the children could keep them out of school or not.

I think undoubtedly the time will come, possibly within a year or two, when the superintendent of that school can handle the affairs of this agency; but with the friction that now exists I believe it is premature, and this agency ought not to be dropped out at this time. I think if that matter had been called to the attention of the chairman he would have thought this agency might be kept for a time at least. My colleague who represents this district in which the school is situated and where this agency is located could give us, no doubt, some information that would be of value in this connection, he having recently visited that agency. I believe that the line of policy suggested by the chairman is a good one and the application ought to be made where practicable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, Mr. Chairman, where there is this small school with very few scholars, as they admit, impossible to get the scholars to come to school, where the superintendent of the school can with the greatest ease perform all the duties with no great tax on his time, where there are only four hundred and odd Indians, with a school of less than fifty pupils in attendance, that it is not unreasonable to expect one man to perform the duties of agent and superintendent. I believe this is a good place to economize to the extent of $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Shoshone Agency, Wyo., $1,500.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting at the end of line 4, page 5, the following:

At the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, this agency certainly should not be abolished. Of these Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians three-fifths are located at the Sisseton Agency and two-fifths at the Devils Lake Agency, in North Dakota. The Committee on Indian Affairs has provided for an agent at Devils Lake. Now, there are the same reasons for an agency at Sisseton as for one at Devils Lake. I am familiar with the conditions at Sisseton, and I know that the Indians there ought to have an agent to protect their interests—to keep liquor off the reservation and to look after their land leases. I certainly think they ought to have an agent. I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, payments of interest are made to these Indians only twice a year. They receive no rations. The agent requires no clerk. There are no employees under him. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated to the committee that this semiannual payment of interest could be made to these Indians by temporarily delegating a special agent for the purpose. It was in view of this statement that we struck out the provision for this agency; and I think we did so properly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Allow me to ask the chairman of the committee why there should be an agency at Devils Lake, where only two-fifths of these Indians—a part of the same tribe—are located, while there is no agent provided for Sisseton.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not oppose a motion of the gentleman to strike out the Devils Lake Agency. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have been informed by a gentleman in the Indian service that there are a great many agencies that might get along without an agent better than Sisseton. There are about 1,800 Indians there. They lease their allotments of land. I know it is their wish that they have an agent there to look after their interests. From what I know personally of the conditions, I certainly think this agency ought to be continued. I understood the chairman of the committee to say yesterday that he would not object to this proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not mean to be so understood. I regret that the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, I must have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. We were satisfied that this agency should be dispensed with; the committee was unanimous about it; otherwise we would not have struck the provision from the bill. It was embraced in the estimates; but after a hearing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs satisfied us that this agency could well be dispensed with. Hence, I feel that I would not be doing my duty toward the committee or the House if I should do otherwise than oppose the adoption of the gentleman's amendment. I regret that he understood me as assenting to his proposition. I did not intend to do so. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I certainly think that the adoption of my proposition will be in the interest of these Indians.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Yakima Agency, Wash., $1,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what agency is left out in the State of Washington?

Mr. SHERMAN. Tulalip.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to know why that was left out—whether its omission was recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What were the reasons?

Mr. SHERMAN. The reasons were that these are not ration Indians. They have reached a higher state of civilization than the Indians of almost any other part of the country. They are well to do. They live in houses. They go out to work, which is more than a great many other Indians do. They really do not require the constant presence of an agent.

The Clerk read as follows:

IOWAS.

For interest in lieu of investment on $57,500, balance of $157,500, to July 1, 1898, at 5 per cent per annum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, per ninth article of treaty of May 17, 1854, $2,875.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a typographical error in the paragraph just read. The words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," in lines 21 and 22, should be "nineteen hundred and one." I ask that the correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and civilization of the Shebits, Muddy, and other Indians in southern Utah, $2,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order on this paragraph, embracing lines 16, 17, and 18 of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order does not lie against the provision; but if the gentleman wants an explanation I will be very glad to make it.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that there is no treaty with these Indians whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is a gratuity.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that they have never been demoralized and ruined, horse, foot, and dragoons, by any appropriation from the public Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we started in, horse, foot, and dragoons, about two years ago. How much of demoralization has been caused by the appropriation then made I do not know. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING] is probably familiar with all the facts in the case.

But I will state to the committee that this is a provision for a payment in the Indian service during the next fiscal year. It does not seem to me that the point of order lies against it.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it does. If all of the Indians, without reference to treaty stipulations, without reference to their status of civilization or condition, are to be the favored people in the United States, and money without stint can be appropriated for them, why, you can go into the Indian Territory and appropriate for all the tribes there, and to the Indians of New York, some ninety thousand altogether, and it will be perfectly in order, just as much as the proposition now pending is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. SHERMAN. The business of the Indian bill, Mr. Chairman, is to provide for the Indian service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to suggest that if the gentleman from Illinois will state the ground on which he makes the point of order we could proceed more regularly.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that there is no treaty between the Indians and the United States justifying this appropriation. There is no treaty with them at all, and I am speaking now on a technical ground. Secondly, it is a new item in the bill, not a continuing work already in progress.

Mr. SHERMAN. We did not appropriate for these Indians last year, but we did two years ago. I think the gentleman is in error in his contention that any appropriation must be based upon a treaty obligation in order to avoid the point of order. I believe he is wrong in that contention, and that it is proper, under the rules, to appropriate in this bill for any proper expenditure during the fiscal year for which the bill is intended to appropriate; and this is such a provision.

It seems to me that it is not necessary in the least that it should be based upon a treaty obligation in order to come within the rule and entitle it to be placed upon the Indian bill. If it were upon some sort of a claim arising in some other year, the point of order would lie against it. But this is for an expenditure during the fiscal year for which the bill is intended to operate, and to cover the expense of that year in connection with the Indian service.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a single observation in reply to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

As I understand, a number of years ago these Indians had some sort of a treaty or arrangement with the Government of the United States. At any rate, as a result of the negotiations then carried on an appropriation was made by the United States for the purchase of land in southern Utah or western Nevada. What was done with the appropriation I do not know, but understand that the Indians were placed on a tract of land, where they remained for a few years and received monetary aid from the Government. The Government made some expenditures and erected some buildings, and the Indians whose headquarters were there enjoyed the benefits of the Government's generosity. How long the Government's aid was given, I do not know. However, it ceased a number of years ago, and for years nothing was done for the support of the Indians. They were dependent upon the gifts of the people residing in that neighborhood for support. They were a great burden to the white people.

About six years ago a small appropriation was made by the Government for the purchase of lands to aid in the support of these Indians. Some buildings were erected upon this land, and the Government has since then in a sort of desultory manner taken care of that land. I think the gentleman from New York is correct in stating that last year no direct appropriation was made; but, as I am advised, a portion of the general fund of the Government was used for the support of these Indians, carrying out the policy which was inaugurated a number of years ago. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, as I remember, an appropriation was made, to be used in the support and civilization of these Indians.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that these Indians do belong to some tribe which had treaty stipulations with the Government. I am not able to state to which tribe they belong. They have been wandering around in southern Utah and northern Arizona and eastern Nevada for many years, and have had no care from the Government, except such as I have referred to. There are about 400 Indians in all. The Government has already made an appropriation of $25,000 for the erection of school buildings, in order to educate the school children among them. The site has been selected and the buildings will soon be constructed. So it appears that the Government has recognized and has been exercising control over them, more or less, for some obligation resting upon it to at least partially care for these Indians. I hope that my friend from Illinois, even if his point of order be well taken, by reason of the absence of treaty between them and the United States, will not insist on it, in view of the action of the Government heretofore with respect to these Indians.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I have been able to find, there is no treaty that justifies this appropriation, and there is nothing surrounding it to bring it within Rule XXI, as a public work in progress. If this is in order, it is in order to appropriate for the support and civilization of the New York Indians in the gentleman's own State, and for seventy or eighty thousand Indians in the Indian Territory. I make this point of order because it is so rare indeed that there are Indians to be found who are not completely ruined, that I should dislike very much to see the ruining commenced.

Mr. KING. With the permission of my friend, I want to state that my information is that these Indians belong to the Ute Indian tribe, with whom treaty stipulations were entered into in the early sixties.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if they belong to the Utes, they have their rights under the treaty.

Mr. KING. They are remnants or offshoots of the Ute tribe, but they are not directly associated with the Ute Indians and have not been upon the lands which the Government has reserved for the occupancy of that tribe. These Indians, though they are of Ute origin, as I understand, and would perhaps be classified as Utes, do not live upon the Uintah Reservation and have received nothing from the Government appropriations made to that tribe, but the appropriations which have been made by the Government have been made directly to them; and, as I stated to the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the Government for twenty years, off and on, has been caring for these Indians, so that the point of order which the gentleman makes that it is a new appropriation, it seems to me, would not lie.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know if that was in accordance with treaty stipulations?

Mr. KING. Well, as I have stated, there were no treaty stipulations with these Indians for whom I am asking this appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. I would suggest that these Indians, if they are a part of the Ute tribe, would be admitted to that tribe by returning to the reservation and showing that they were part of that tribe, and then they would participate in the payments made to the Utes and the appropriations made for their benefit.

Mr. KING. I do not think they can go upon the Uintah Reservation, and are not classed by the Government as Ute Indians, but they derive their origin from the same source. They have not lived with the Ute Indians within the memory of man, but they are familiarly known as Utes, or offshoots of the Ute tribe.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], state to the Chair whether or not the three preceding paragraphs are based upon treaty stipulations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; there are very many paragraphs through the bill that are pure gratuities that are not based upon treaty stipulations. There are more than half a million dollars appropriated in the bill outside of schools not based on treaty stipulations.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that the only way that they stand against the point of order is that appropriations have heretofore been made and that they are public works in progress. I should have made points of order upon many of these items where there were no treaty stipulations if it had not been that the appropriations have been made for years, and the very object of this point of order is not to embark upon this work.

Mr. KING. Let me make an observation in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois. This is not embarking upon a new venture or a new enterprise. As I suggested a moment ago, these Indians already have some land, the exact amount I do not know, and there is an agent in charge of this ground, and a small effort is being made to farm it.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no agent; there is a teacher.

Mr. KING. There is a teacher there, and the teacher has employed the necessary help and does employ the necessary help for the tillage of the small quantity of ground which the Indians own. Their water supply is wholly inadequate to irrigate the lands they possess, and the particular appropriation that is made is, as I have stated, for the support of these Indians and for the equipment of their farms. They have some farm equipments and a few animals. The school has been taught upon the farm for perhaps the past two years. So that this is not a new enterprise, but it is one that has been continued for a number of years.

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that those Indians out in Utah are away up in G; that they are better cultured, better people, better able to take care of themselves, more nearly self-supporting, have been better looked after without the intervention of the Government than perhaps any of the other Indians.

Mr. KING. That is true, I wish to say to my friend, of those who reside in the northern part of the State; but those who are in the southern portion of the State are not so favorably situated. Having no permanent aid from the Government, they have been dependent upon the people.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2 of Rule XXI expressly provides:

No appropriation shall be reported on any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The Chair does not understand the claim is made that this appropriation comes within the provisions of either one of those two clauses of section 2 of Rule XXI. It is not claimed that it is made in accordance with any treaty stipulation or existing law; and the latter clause of the paragraph is so general in its terms it might include other tribes of Indians. The language is, "and other Indians in southern Utah." Not being in accordance with treaty stipulations, therefore, and not coming within the other provision of section 2 of the rule, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Chair puts it upon the ground that the section is rather indefinite as to the tribes of Indians, and, if that be true, I would like to amend by striking out the words "other Indians," so that it would leave the matter definite and show that the appropriation would apply to the same Indians to whom appropriation was made in the past, and clearly indicate that it was the continuation of an enterprise upon which the Government had embarked, to wit, the civilization and support of these Indians, for whom it has purchased lands, and to whom it has given money for their civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not understand the Chair correctly if he understood that its decision is based on the words "other Indians of southern Utah." The Chair does not think there is anything in the point of this appropriation being a "continuation of appropriations for public works and objects already in progress." There was no appropriation made at the last session for the purposes or anything in relation thereto. It is entirely a new appropriation and is not authorized by existing law.

For the support and civilization of the Kaibab Indians in southern Utah, $2,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on lines 6 and 7, page 33. It is a similar case to the point of order just decided.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is identical with the one on the preceding page, upon which the Chair has already ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Yakimas, and other Indians at said agency, including pay of employees, $5,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, there was an error in the print of the bill on line 18. The committee recommended the appropriation of $8,000, and in the print it was inserted as $5,000. I ask that the correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Territory: For general incidental expenses of the Indian Service in the Indian Territory, including incidental expenses of the Indian inspector's office and for pay of employees, $18,000: Provided, however, That hereafter no agent, policeman, or other person in the employ of the Government in Indian Territory shall exercise the right or power to expel any person from said Territory for the collection of any tax in favor of such tribes. This provision, however, should not apply to the collection of lease money or royalties: Provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred and paid by the clerks of the United States courts in Indian Territory for attendance on court, record books, stationery, and extra clerk hire subsequent to May 31, 1900, shall be allowed and paid to said clerks on accounts approved by the judge of the court and accompanied by proper vouchers: Provided further, That hereafter the said clerks shall be required to account to the United States only for fees earned in civil, criminal, chancery, and probate cases filed or heard in said courts, and that all other fees pertaining to other duties not required of clerks of United States circuit or district courts may be retained by said clerks, and all expenses incurred for additional clerk hire, record books, stationery, etc., on account of such additional duties, and all their necessary expenses in attending the courts held at different places in their respective districts, shall be defrayed by said clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order upon one part of this paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. What part?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. On lines 16 to 22.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Page 34.

Mr. LACEY. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order as to the remainder of the paragraph and to each part of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily pass over this portion of the bill, and the gentleman from Iowa will simply reserve the point of order for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I think, perhaps, if this is passed over we can agree upon an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to pass this paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the point of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order is made by the gentleman from Iowa to the entire paragraph in relation to the Indian Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only from line 22 on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa made that point of order.

Mr. LACEY. There are two propositions, and I make the point of order as to both.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is desired that the point of order be reserved, and an amendment prepared by the gentleman from Iowa that will meet the approval of the committee, so that there will be no objection to it, and unanimous consent to that has been given.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I reserve the point of order against the provision contained in lines 16 to 22.

Mr. SHERMAN. What page?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The same page.

Mr. LITTLE. I raise the point of order that the point of order comes too late as to this paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Well, this whole paragraph is in connection with appropriations for Indian Territory, and upon the conclusion of the paragraph I rose and addressed the Chair and made the point of order against this provision. I understand that is the proper practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman made his point of order in time.

Mr. LITTLE. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Do I understand this part of the bill was passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph was passed over temporarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not understand my request covered anything further than the provision from line 22 on.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to take up the other now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment I would like to offer at the proper time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, pending the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], as I have yet taken no time of the committee, I desire to submit a statement in relation to this provision; in other words, I want to debate the subject about ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to debate the paragraph for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to believe that no member of this House who fully understands the situation in the Indian Territory would insist upon a point of order. This Congress, in 1898, in what is known as the Curtis bill, provided that no tribal law should be enforced, either in law or equity, in the courts of the Indian Territory. This provision was evidently intended to make a division between the enforcement of the Indian laws as against Indians and against the noncitizen in that country.

The members of this House should appreciate the fact that the Indian Territory stands upon an entirely different footing and upon different conditions from any of the Indian reservations throughout the country. In this nation, as is well known, there are five tribes and five tribal limited governments. Within that Territory there are about 300,000 white people and about twenty-odd thousand negroes. There are no means of education for the white or negro children except in the few towns that are incorporated; their funds are obtained by taxing themselves. These Indian tribes own their own land, collect their lease money, collect their royalties from the mines, and have large funds put to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

Now, the condition that this amendment was enacted to reach was this. Each of these tribal governments grew out of ancient conditions, having tax laws against the noncitizen, differing in rates in the different tribes. In one of them they charge a noncitizen laborer $6 a year for the privilege of breathing the air of that country. The thousands of miners engaged in mining coal in that Territory, the royalties of which are paid to the Indians, must also pay 50 cents a month for the privilege of laboring. His children and the children of other noncitizens get no benefit from the tax. Merchants in the towns in that country are taxed by these bills from one-half of 1 per cent to 1½ per cent on the invoice of all the goods they offer for sale in their stores, so that, if the merchant in retailing turns over his capital stock four times a year, in one instance it would be 6 per cent of the value of his goods. All the professions are taxed by these bills. In the Territory a tax of one-half per cent on the capital stock of banks is imposed, and every species of industry, from the ginger-snap stand to the banker, is attempted to be taxed by these tribal laws.

Under the Curtis Act the noncitizen was given a status in the Indian Territory, and his rights and standing in the town property have been determined by the courts. The courts have given them a right to levy a tax on themselves, not to exceed 2 per cent per annum, for the support of the city government and schools. Time and time over these noncitizens have knocked at the doors of Congress and asked us to make appropriations directly out of the Treasury for the education of the noncitizens in that country. Congress has persistently refused to do this.

Now, referring again to the Curtis Act, which provided that these laws should not be enforced either in law or equity in the courts of the Indian Territory. After that act passed, the Secretary of the Interior, on account of some ancient statute, has held that it was his duty to collect these taxes and exercise the power that is exercised in any Indian reservation and take the citizen by the back of the neck and put him out of the country regardless of his property rights unless he submits to the exactions of these little fossilized and half-destroyed tribes and pays the tax levied upon him.

I believe it will be not only of great benefit to the white men, but to the Indians, in this country if we stop this manner of proceeding. The amendment to which the point of order is directed does not interfere in the slightest degree with the collection of all the rents to which the Indian is entitled, it does not interfere with the collection of all the royalties to which he is entitled, and no man will go farther than I will to have the Indian paid what is his right, to pay him for every foot of property and for everything that he owns in this country that is used by the white man. But after we have given a noncitizen a patent in that country, which he must buy and pay for, I say it is fundamentally wrong to tax the people when they have no voice in the Government and can get no benefit from the taxes. I believe it is but little short of robbery of the people there, whose children are going without the aid and benefit of taxation.

I do not want to deceive Congress as to the meaning of this amendment. If it should be adopted, the Indian agents in that Territory will be prohibited thereafter from expelling the noncitizens of that Territory, and there will be no means for collecting these privileged taxes to which the Indians are not entitled. The amendment will simply have the effect of repealing an ancient statute enacted when that country was a reservation. Under a provision of the Government adopted at that time the right was exercised, which is now exercised on Indian reservations, of putting off a noncitizen. But at the present time such a person has a right to go to any of these towns and to carry on any legitimate business; he has the right to occupy land. But if a tax is demanded—it may be a thousand dollars—and if the noncitizen disputes the demand and declines to pay it, the Indian agent is authorized to say, "You are a defaulter to the Indian tribe; you are ordered to vacate the Indian Territory without regard to your property interests or your family interests."

I have been, and am still, an advocate of a uniform system of taxation there, a system taxing privileges in that country for the benefit and education of all the children of the Indian Territory. Such a measure ought to be passed. It will never be passed as long as these tribes are encouraged by the collection of this iniquitous tax. Such a tax could not be imposed except by a strained construction of the law of Congress. It can not be collected without utter disregard of the rights of the noncitizens in that Territory. We are paying the salaries of four Federal judges and innumerable commissioners exercising full power to enforce the law in that country, and I say the appeal in this matter ought to go to the courts; that the rights of the people in that country ought not to be intrusted to the hands of a simple employee of the Government.

With this statement I can only appeal to my distinguished friend from New York to withdraw his point of order. I concede that the proposition is subject to the point of order, but the great necessity of adopting such an amendment, its manifest justice, should, it seems to me, warrant Congress in adopting it. If its provisions are considered crude or in any way insufficient, I will join with anyone here most heartily in making the provision all that it should be in justice both to the Indians and the noncitizens.

Allow me to say while on the floor that if this point of order is sustained I shall ask the privilege of offering at this point as an amendment a bill providing for taxation in that country—a measure which has the approval of the Indian Department, and which will give at least some measure of relief to the 50,000 children in that country who have for years and years been without any means of education. Not only the white children, but the great bulk of the negro children of that country are deprived of any benefit from the educational funds of these Indians. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to detain the committee further at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, it may be that if members of this House understood this question thoroughly this point of order would not be raised. Nevertheless we are compelled to act upon the information we have at hand. I have examined very carefully the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the current year. He reviews to some extent the question of imposing tribal taxes in the Indian Territory, but he makes no recommendations whatever as to legislation for the purpose of correcting any evils that may exist there.

In my opinion it is the duty of Congress to protect not particularly the whites in the Indian Territory, but the Indians. During the past summer I made a short trip through that section of country. My observations impressed me that the one great power which is used for the benefit and protection of the Indians is the power of the agent and the constables to remove from the Territory people who do not comply with the laws. If this amendment be permitted to pass, then, under the provisions of the Curtis Act, the tribal taxes can not be enforced in the courts in the Territory. If these Indians have the right to levy these taxes, they should have a method for collecting them.

In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the current year there is an opinion of the Attorney-General, rendered September 7, 1900, which holds that—

Under the provisions of sections 2147 to 2150, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States the authority and duty of the Interior Department is within any of these Indian nations to remove all persons of the classes forbidden by treaty or law who are there without Indian permit or license; to close all business which requires permit or license and is being carried on there without one, and to remove all cattle being pastured on public lands without Indian permit or license where such permit and license is required.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to concede that perhaps I am not as familiar with the conditions existing in the Indian Territory as my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE]. Nevertheless I think that if there were such crying need for legislation of this character as the gentleman from Arkansas claims, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would certainly have included in his report some recommendation on the subject.

I am free to say that I do not, in all matters connected with the Indian service, follow the recommendation of the Commissioner very closely. There are some things upon which I differ with him materially. But upon questions such as this I have found in my limited experience that as a rule his recommendations are safe and sound. I feel constrained, therefore, to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear from the report of the committee and from the concession of the gentleman from Arkansas that this provision is obnoxious to section 2 of Rule XXI. The point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the paragraph just read the following:

"That for the purpose of maintaining a system of free schools for the education of all children residing in the Indian Territory between the ages of 6 and 21 years, whether children of citizens or noncitizens, and for the care of blind, insane, and orphans, there be, and is hereby, levied the following per capita taxes, and taxes on property and privileges in the Indian Territory, to wit:

"Upon each male person over the age of 21 years, who is not a member of any Indian tribe, residing in the Indian Territory, an annual per capita tax of $1.

"Upon each attorney or counselor at law, $8 per annum, in addition to the tax of $1 hereinbefore provided.

"Upon each practicing physician or surgeon, dentist, or pharmacist, the sum of $8 per annum, in addition to the tax of $1 hereinbefore provided.

"Upon each hotel, $25 per annum.

"Upon each cotton gin, the sum of $5 per annum.

"Upon each cotton compress, the sum of $25 per annum.

"Upon each blacksmith shop, wagon shop, or cabinet workshop, $5; upon each insurance agent (life or fire), $10, and upon each photograph gallery, butcher shop, lunch stand, restaurant, or barber shop, the sum of $5 per annum.

"Upon each sawmill, the sum of $5 per annum.

"Upon each livery stable and billiard or pool hall, the sum of $10 per annum.

"Upon all merchants, grocers, druggists, and other persons engaged in any mercantile or other business who buy or sell any goods or chattels, whether citizen or noncitizen, the sum of one-half of 1 per cent upon the average annual values of their stocks carried for the preceding year; but where they have not been engaged in such business in said Territory for the preceding year, the tax shall be based upon the value of the stock on hand when payment of the tax is demanded; upon each money lender, pawnbroker, or real estate agent, $25.

"Upon all private business corporations carrying on any business in said Territory for gain, whether resident or nonresident corporations, an annual tax of $25.

"All the taxes aforesaid shall be paid annually in advance, commencing on the 1st day of July, 1900, and where the person or company against whom the tax is to be levied comes into the Territory or engages in any kind of business hereinbefore named between the 1st day of July in one year and that time in the succeeding year, the tax shall be levied on the basis of a full year's tax for a half year or over, and a half year's tax for less than a half year.

"Upon each theatrical company for each performance, the sum of $2, payable in advance.

"Upon each circus for each performance, the sum of $10, payable in advance."

Mr. SHERMAN (before the conclusion of the reading of the entire amendment). Mr. Chairman, I dislike exceedingly to raise a point of order against my colleague from Arkansas, but clearly what has been read shows that this is not a proper provision for the appropriation bill. It is not a matter which has been sufficiently considered before the committee, it seems to me, to warrant my not raising the point of order against it as chairman.

Mr. LITTLE. If my friend will permit me, the bill I offer as an amendment at this time, reaching the condition of affairs which I spoke of a few moments ago, is one prepared in the Indian Office, with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, and is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had forgotten that it had been favorably considered by the committee.

Mr. LITTLE. It has been, and I think it exceedingly meritorious as a proposition to be incorporated here. I understand, of course, that this is not a bill—this appropriation bill—for such legislation as this, and I would not offer it at this time as an amendment except for the great necessity which exists and which I do not believe can be remedied in any other way. I asked an appropriation of $50,000 once for this purpose and Congress refused to consider the matter, and I do not see any impropriety in putting the amendment on this bill.

By this provision the same relief can be given to the children there, and we will be able to collect something from those people who ought to be made to pay their taxes for educational purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the gentleman's statement, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt of the merits of the proposition, but I do not think it ought to be included in this appropriation bill. It is quite a complicated legislative proposition, and I think we ought to take it up by itself rather than as a section of the appropriation bill; and hence I have felt constrained, very much against my own wishes, to raise the point of order. But I raise the point of order now rather than to wait until the reading of the entire amendment is finished, because it must be apparent to the Chair from what has been read that it is unnecessary to proceed with the further reading of it to establish the fact that it is not in order on this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. I of course concede the point of order,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman concedes the point of order to be well taken, and it is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new proviso:

"That any incorporated city or town in the Indian Territory having a population of 1,000 or more is hereby authorized to issue bonds and borrow money thereon, to be used for the construction of sewers and waterworks and the building of schoolhouses; such bonds not to exceed an amount the interest on which at 5 per cent per annum would be liquidated by a tax of 5 mills upon the dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in such city or town, to be ascertained by the last assessment for purposes of taxation: Provided, That before such bonds shall be issued the same shall be authorized by a two-thirds majority vote of the qualified voters of such city or town voting at an election held for that purpose, notice of which shall be published for four consecutive weeks prior thereto in a newspaper of general circulation published in such municipality: And provided further, That such bonds shall not be issued until it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the United States court for the judicial district in which such municipality is located, by petition of the mayor and council thereof, or otherwise, that all the requirements of this section shall have been complied with, who shall thereupon cause to be entered upon the minutes of his court a judgment or decree reciting the facts as he finds them to be.

Mr. SHERMAN (before the reading was completed). Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to raise the point of order. It is unnecessary to finish the reading of it, for it is clearly as obnoxious to the rule as was the other amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas, and although it is a measure which has been favorably reported by the committee, it is on the House Calendar, and can be reached at any time when the committee is called in the morning hour; and therefore I must raise the point of order against it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think it extremely doubtful if this measure can be reached at this session of Congress. The Curtis bill, passed in the Fifty-fifth Congress, provided that cities and towns might incorporate in that Territory. There are fifteen or twenty of them there at this time. Any town, under this bill, of 1,000 inhabitants or over has the right to tax itself to an amount of 5 mills on the dollar to build schoolhouses, and it is absolutely necessary that these incorporated towns should have schoolhouses if they are to educate the children there. In order to accomplish that, it is necessary to pass a bill to levy a tax for the purpose of building the schoolhouses.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, if there was no other way of reaching the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, I would perhaps not raise the point of order; but this is a morning-hour bill. The committees surely will be called before the end of this Congress. I do not doubt that the Indian Committee will be reached on that call, and this bill can be taken up, the gentleman from Texas, or the chairman of the committee, either, having been authorized to call it up for consideration at that time; and hence I am constrained to insist upon the point of order, much as I regret to do so against the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operating one portable sawmill for the Klamath Agency, Oreg, and for necessary repairs to same, $1,500.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve a point of order on that sawmill for the Klamaths.

Mr. SHERMAN. In last year's bill we appropriated for the construction of this sawmill, and this is for the running of the same. This is surely the continuation of a work now in progress.

Mr. CANNON. These Indians, as I understand it, are very well off?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CANNON. They have very valuable lands?

Mr. SHERMAN. They have lands, some of them good, and they have reached a pretty high degree of civilization.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if Congress gave them a sawmill last year, without any treaty obligation, when they were quite able to buy their own sawmill, I do not know that that can be called a continuing work, that Congress shall operate the sawmill for them. I think the point of order ought to have been made a year ago.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, possibly the gentleman is correct; but not having been made a year ago, I hardly think it is good now.

Mr. CANNON. This is not for another sawmill.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is for the same sawmill.

Mr. CANNON. This is to operate it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is to operate the sawmill for which we provided last year.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I know, it is not authorized by law, and there never has been an appropriation and no treaty stipulation for operating a sawmill there. It is not a work in progress.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but it will be as soon as we appropriate for its operation. It is a sawmill that is idle now.

Mr. CANNON. I think I will have to insist on my point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman. We provided for the construction of this sawmill last year, and this is simply an appropriation to provide for the operation of it. I think under the meaning of the rule it is for the continuance of a work now in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think so. These are rich Indians, as I understand it, and quite as able as are our own people to pay for this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the Chairman rule first on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule first on the point of order. This appropriation having been contained in the last bill, the Chair is inclined to rule that this must be regarded as a continuing public work, and the point of order will be overruled.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out lines 23, 24, and 25 on page 37.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to amend by striking out lines 23, 24, and 25 on page 37 of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that amendment will not carry. There is a lot of timber up there, and I do not care whether it ought to be so or not, if we do not provide for operating this sawmill it probably will lie idle and will not be used, and the Indians will not receive from it the benefit we desired they should when we provided for its construction. I think it is shortsighted to refuse an appropriation for the operation of the sawmill now that we have erected it. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail.

Mr. CANNON. Where do the Klamaths live?

Mr. SHERMAN. They live in the State of Oregon, I think; up toward the Sound, as I recollect it.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that they live on the Sound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is farther back.

Mr. CANNON. My impression is, further, that they have magnificent timber lands. My impression is, further, that they have very valuable lands that are cleared. My impression is, further, that they raise hops galore—a very profitable crop. My impression is, further, that they are much better situated and cared for themselves, from the property standpoint, than is the average white man who lives in the sweat of his face. Therefore it seems to me it ought to be stricken out. I think we are running wild touching our Indian policy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing more to say, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 3, noes 24.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Insert at the end of line 25:

"That the sum of $2,690.40 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the said sum to be placed to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund in the Treasury of the United States in payment for all Choctaw lands yet unsold in the State of Mississippi.

"That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the said Choctaw orphan lands in the State of Mississippi as other public lands are disposed of."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order. I do not know where that comes in.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment prepared by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and he has presented it to the chairman of the committee. I do not know whether it is the understanding that this amendment is germane or not. It seems to me it is a just amendment and a just amount of appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I understand properly the amendment, it is only desired to enact the second section, without the appropriation, which has heretofore been made. Am I not correct?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is my understanding. The appropriation was made last Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate and the House passed a bill, and by some mistake the appropriation item was also included in the last annual appropriation bill. The two bills were sent to the President, and the single one was recalled from the President. The appropriation-bill item was inserted without the legislative feature of the bill, which, as an amendment, is now offered.

Mr. McCLEARY. That is, the money was provided, but no authority was given to sell the land.

Mr. CANNON. Well, let it be read again.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask the Clerk to report the amendment without that part carrying the appropriation.

Insert at the end of line 25, page 37, the following:

"That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the said Choctaw orphan lands in the State of Mississippi as other public lands are disposed of."

Mr. LITTLE. That is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. Strike out the word "said."

Mr. CANNON. That is clearly legislation. I do not want to make the point of order if it is apt. In the first place, I do not see where it comes in. The gentleman has offered it after line 25, page 37, which refers to the Klamath Indians and their sawmill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It should come in at the end of line 20, after the word "law."

Mr. CANNON. Ah! That comes in at the end of the provision touching the commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Clerk will strike out the word "said" and then will read the amendment, the gentleman will see how it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the section as it would be amended.

Insert at the end of line 27, page 37:

"That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the Choctaw orphan lands in the State of Mississippi as other public lands are disposed of."

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, that is really subject to a point of order. Here is a clause in the bill that relates to the Dawes Commission and appropriations touching the service in the Indian Territory pure and simple. Now, then, here is an amendment, which I think is not at all germane, that directs, not the Dawes Commission—has no relation to it—but directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell some orphan lands in the State of Mississippi. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are a part of the Choctaws.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, I can explain it. There was a bill introduced and passed in this House, and also passed by the Senate. I will read the preamble of the bill that was passed, as that will give the gentleman a better idea of what it was:

Whereas it was provided by act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495), that "the Choctaw orphan Indian lands in the State of Mississippi yet unsold shall be taken by the United States Government at $1.25 per acre and the proceeds placed to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund in the Treasury of the United States, the number of acres to be determined by the General Land Office."

The General Land Office proceeded under the act quoted in that preamble and ascertained the number of acres that were undisposed of. Then in the Indian appropriation bill last year the Senate placed a provision appropriating the money to pay for this land, but did not put in the provision authorizing the Land Office to dispose of it.

Mr. CANNON. Has the money been paid?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Yes; the money was appropriated, and the lands now belong to the United States, but there is no provision by which the Land Office can dispose of it as public lands.

Mr. CANNON. This does not seem to be an act. It seems to be a bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The bill passed the House, and it was passed by the Senate and sent to the President.

Mr. CANNON. It never became a law.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The provision that provides for the payment of the money was placed on the Indian appropriation bill; then the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SHERMAN], after it was passed, in the belief that the provision in the appropriation bill was sufficient, had a resolution passed recalling the bill from the President. It was afterwards ascertained that while the appropriation had been made, no provision had been made authorizing the General Land Office to dispose of these lands as other public lands.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amount of this land?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I think it is stated in the preamble.

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I do not know the exact number of acres.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman mean the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. No; the amount of the land.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, perhaps, 2,600 acres; it is not a large amount.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know about it, after reading the bill which did not pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is as the gentleman from New York says. The bill was sent to the President, and in the closing days of the last session was recalled from the President because the appropriation had been made in another bill; but the bill making the appropriation did not carry the legislative features of this bill providing for the disposition of the land, the purchase price of which was appropriated in another bill.

Mr. CANNON. How are the lands to be disposed of?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the way all other public lands are disposed of. That is this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of physician, New York Agency, $900.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 5, page 38, insert:

"For relief and support of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas and the Sioux of Devils Lake, N. Dak., to be expended for their benefit under direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and for such purposes as he may direct, $25,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. CANNON. I think, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the matter brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations on the deficiency bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

H. R. 11552. An act granting an increase of pension to Louis Heibel.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 5655. An act granting a pension to Lurinda Laughlin;

H. R. 1734. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Whitmore;

H. R. 10062. An act granting an increase of pension to Harriet Crotsenburg;

H. R. 9108. An act granting a pension to Maria H. Hixon;

H. R. 5117. An act granting a pension to Roland Burnett;

H. R. 2752. An act granting an increase of pension to Edmund P. Tierney; and

H. R. 12838. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 92. An act granting a pension to William M. Ferry;

S. 3436. An act granting a pension to Catharine Weinheiner; and

S. 4184. An act granting an increase of pension to Evelyn Neale Murray.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into the District of Alaska for 1900, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this is an item submitted to this House in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury suggesting the urgent necessity for this appropriation. This letter was accompanied by a recommendation from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which was also accompanied by an urgent recommendation from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The fact is that smallpox is epidemic in the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas. Their reservation has for some months been quarantined, and the people residing there have been deprived of the privilege of going out of the reservation to seek employment among the white farmers, and the appropriation heretofore made for their support and maintenance has been practically exhausted. The crops last summer in that part of the State were almost an absolute failure, and unless this appropriation is made for these Indians who are in this lamentable condition many will die the ensuing winter from starvation and exposure. I suggest that it is not only highly proper, but it is extremely necessary that this appropriation should be made. In reference to the point of order made by my friend the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I believe it is in line with all the other appropriations for the support and maintenance of Indians contained in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the proposed amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Is this by virtue of any treaty stipulation?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SPALDING] whether the land has been allotted to these Indians?

Mr. SPALDING. I think not.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] understand about that?

Mr. SPALDING. My impression is that there is a treaty which has been negotiated with these Indians, but not ratified, and which is awaiting action in the Senate at this time.

Mr. CANNON. Have they any lands of their own?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I find upon examination that their lands have been allotted to the extent of 131,000 acres.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that is not the whole of the land.

Mr. CANNON. Then these Indians are citizens of North Dakota and have the right to vote?

Mr. SPALDING. I do not so understand it; not the Turtle Mountain band.

Mr. CURTIS. There are 144,000 acres unallotted, and the treaty referred to covers these 144,000 acres.

Mr. CANNON. If they are citizens of North Dakota the burden is on the State to support them.

Mr. SPALDING. I will say that my understanding is that there is only a small fraction of these Indians who are citizens of North Dakota; an almost insignificant number.

Mr. CANNON. When was this estimate sent in?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think somewhere about the 8th of December.

Mr. SPALDING. The 6th of December.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from North Dakota know about the trouble, and whether it has ceased or not?

Mr. SPALDING. I know it was reported some time previous to that time that they thought they had the smallpox stamped out, but at the time this appeal was made it had again broken out.

Mr. CANNON. Well, half of a month has gone by.

Mr. SPALDING. A half of a month is only the time that is required for quarantine purposes, and it could not be stamped out in that time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if this appropriation is made immediately available, I submit to the gentleman from New York that there is no possibility of this bill being enacted into law before the 1st of February.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish I could hope that it would be enacted into law by that time. I have not the faintest idea that it will be enacted by the 1st of February.

Mr. CANNON. If that be true, why appropriate $25,000 to stamp out smallpox which they have had for a month on a bill that it is not possible to become a law until the last days of February?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department has already expended all the money available in its attempt to stamp out this disease. I had some little conversation with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in his committee room in reference to the insertion of this item in the urgent deficiency bill recently passed. I was to have reported to him in reference to the condition of a fund appropriated last year amounting to $50,000 to be used for stamping out smallpox throughout the United States. Before I had been to the Indian Office, however, and obtained the information which I desired and brought it here the gentleman had reported his deficiency bill, and this item was not contained in it.

I do not mean to imply that the gentleman exercised undue haste; he did not. It was, I think, the second day after our conversation before I went to the committee room to give him full information, as I was not able to go to the Indian Office on the same day upon which I first spoke to him. When I was at the Indian Office to obtain the information in reference to this other fund, which the Department tells me is entirely exhausted, the officer with whom I spoke impressed upon me the necessity for this appropriation of $25,000, which is not simply to buy vaccine and to hire people to act as quarantine officers, but is for the purpose of buying for these Indians the necessaries of life, which they are unable to raise because the quarantine precludes the possibility of their working off the reservation and earning any money for their own support.

It is true, as the gentleman says, that this appropriation will not be available for a month or so; but it may be possible that the Indian Office will find some way of "shinning along," as the saying is, until the appropriation is available.

Mr. KING. How many of these Indians are there?

Mr. SHERMAN. One thousand and thirty-four. I think this a very proper appropriation, and I very much regret that it was not put upon the deficiency bill. I have asked the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SPALDING] to go to the Senate, as I presume he has already done, and see whether the item can not be inserted there upon the deficiency bill. If that effort should be successful, the item can be struck off of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before our committee and asked that this appropriation be made. He also informed the committee that the smallpox existed on several other Indian reservations and that something would have to be done to stamp it out.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think this appropriation, if made, will be effective; yet, in view of the pitiable condition of these Indians, I do not feel justified in insisting on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent that we go back to page 39, line 3, in order that I may offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the point in the bill indicated by the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. CANNON. Let us first hear what the amendment is.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after the word "annum," line 3, page 39, the following:

"For repairs to the bridge across Wind River on the Shoshone Reservation, in Wyoming, $850, to be immediately available."

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that the Clerk read a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which will explain this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 19, 1900.

SIR: Indian appropriation act approved May 31, 1900, Public—No. 131, page 23, provided for the expenditure of $750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for making the necessary repairs to the Big Wind River Bridge, Shoshone Agency, Wyo.

Before the appropriation could be used a second span of the bridge, weakened by the constant strain, was precipitated into the river and would have been utterly destroyed had not the agent taken immediate steps to secure it, incurring thereby an indebtedness of $100, for which authority was granted him to settle out of the appropriation of $750, leaving a balance of $650.

It will require at least $1,500 to place the bridge in a thorough state of repair; and as it is considered a very necessary adjunct to the proper management of agency and school affairs, I have the honor to respectfully recommend that Congress authorize an appropriation of $850 to defray the expenses for the necessary repairs, said appropriation to be immediately available.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the paragraph to which the gentleman from Wyoming proposes to offer this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me this item does not belong to this bill, yet it is "so small a baby" that I will withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Committee of the Whole will return to the paragraph indicated by the gentleman from Wyoming; and the question is on the amendment of that gentleman, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Lieut. Col. James F. Randlett, retired from the Army, while serving as agent at the Uintah and Ouray Agency, Utah (as provided in 27 U. S. Stat., p. 120), for six months and twenty-three days, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, the sum of $1,015.

Mr. MORRIS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. CANNON. Before that amendment is read I wish to reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

The amendment of Mr. MORRIS was read, as follows:

Insert, after line 5 on page 41, the following:

"To pay balance due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., from certain Fond du Lac Indians for supplies furnished to said Indians at the request of the Indian farmer, as ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1896, as follows: H. B. Allen, $24.14; Charles Gasper, $1,049.46; J. A. Rene, $44.91; James A. Wallace, $232.68; Kelly & Moses, $40.49; Mrs. James Peacha, $116.95; James Peacha, $186.12; Frank P. Thompson, $964.51; A. H. Simons, $176.85; in all, $2,856.11."

Mr. CANNON. I insist on my point of order to the pending paragraph; and it is also perfectly evident from my standpoint that the amendment is subject to a point of order in whatever shape it may be offered. Therefore I insist upon my point of order to the amendment also. These are mere claims. Even if they were audited and ascertained, they belong to the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MORRIS. Not on the point of order; but I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that these claims have already been ascertained in the very best possible way, through a thorough examination by the Secretary of the Interior.

And these amounts, Mr. Chairman, which we desire to appropriate by the amendment are only the balances of the amount found due by the Secretary of the Interior himself, of which a part has been already paid. The only reason that they were not all paid before was that the fund belonging to the Indians, out of which they could have been paid, was appropriated by Congress and paid to the Indians themselves before these men could get their money. There was left a balance of some $4,000, when these claims amounted to $7,000. That balance was paid pro rata, and these bills, which are embraced in the amendment I offer, are for the balances due and for the payment of that amount.

Of course, if the gentleman from Illinois insists upon the point of order I suppose it is well taken. I do not know about that myself. The chairman of the committee informs me that it is.

Mr. CANNON. I am constrained to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, the Chair will hold that the amendment is clearly out of order, being an amendment which should be carried on a deficiency bill or a separate bill; and so the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MORRIS. The chairman of the committee assured me that he would not raise the point of order himself. Of course, he could not answer for the gentleman from Illinois. But I am sorry the point was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to negotiate, through any United States Indian inspector, agreements with any Indians for the cession to the United States of portions of their respective reservations or surplus unallotted lands, any agreements thus negotiated to be subject to subsequent ratification by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, page 41, insert:

"For compiling and publishing, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, a new and complete edition of Laws Relating to Indian Affairs, a compilation of all Indian treaties and agreements which have been ratified by Congress, and a new edition of Executive orders relating to Indian reservations, three separate and distinct works, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I will ask the Clerk to read, then, the following extract from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with reference to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEEDED PUBLICATIONS ON INDIAN MATTERS.

The suggestions made in my last report as to the need of new compilations of laws relating to Indian affairs, of Executive orders concerning Indian reservations, and of treaties and agreements made with Indians are earnestly renewed. The latest edition of Laws Relating to Indian Affairs stops with March 4, 1881; Executive Orders Relating to Indian Reservations is brought down no further than April 1, 1890, and the editions of both works are exhausted. Since these dates legislation of vital importance has been enacted and many changes have been made in Indian reservations. Constant calls are made on the office for the old volumes and for information as to subsequent legislation and Executive action. The public need can be met only by new editions of these books, which should, of course, be brought down to date.

In 1837 a compilation of Indian treaties from 1778 to date was made, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. An inaccurate Revision of Indian Treaties then in force was made in 1873. The demand for a publication that shall contain all ratified treaties and agreements made by the United States with Indian tribes is increasing. It would be in constant use in this office and would be frequently referred to by other Government bureaus and by members of Congress as well as by the public at large.

Again I urge that Congress make an appropriation to cover the expense of compiling and issuing these three publications.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a most important provision for the convenience of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who desire to secure information for the purpose of performing the duties assigned to them in connection with Indian matters, by having access to the various Indian treaties, papers, orders, and agreements. Members of the committee are unable, sometimes even at the Department, without great difficulty, to secure information required in connection with the work of the committee, and some proper compilation of these treaties and agreements is absolutely necessary if that committee is to be able in a proper manner to perform the duties imposed upon it by the House.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, we publish our laws from time to time; the supplements to the Revised Statutes are published regularly; we have the whole machinery running and working in harmony, and I do not know but that the $10,000 sought to be appropriated is not half enough or twice too much. I rather suspect the latter. Therefore I do not think it is in order on this bill, and I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. This is the sum estimated by the Commissioner himself.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think he is a good Commissioner, but I do not know whether he is a better lawyer than I.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I would suggest, if the gentleman will permit the amendment to be considered and acted upon at this time, that if adopted it might operate for economy by enabling members to have more satisfactory information for the performance of their duties.

Mr. CANNON. The information, I think, is sufficient now, and I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois insists upon the point of order. The Chair is constrained to rule that, this being new legislation, the point of order is well taken.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and education of 150 Indian pupils at Chamberlain, S. Dak., $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $3,100; for increasing the capacity of school plant to 150 pupils by the erection of addditional buildings and other improvements, $20,000; in all, $49,650.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "and fifty" in line 1 of this paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that I think he is right in that. But he should also include a change in the total, and I will make all of the changes in a moment and hand them to the Clerk.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; that is satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair would suggest that this paragraph be passed over temporarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will suggest the necessary changes to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this section will be temporarily passed over until the necessary changes can be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Fort Mojave, Ariz., $29,225; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for erection of new dormitory, $15,000; in all, $47,725.

Mr. CANNON. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] to the fact that this matter is like unto the other—that we appropriate for 175 pupils and later on appropriate for the building of the new dormitory. I think the gentleman will find that this is on all fours with the other. It ought to be 150.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that appropriation is the same as last year.

Mr. CANNON. No; it was for 150 last year and is for 175 now. You increase it by 25. It seems to me a year from this time would be the proper time to do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no explanation of it in the superintendent's report. I will consent to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. To strike out seventy-five and insert fifty?

Mr. SHERMAN. And change the amount to correspond with the change in number. That covers it. The Clerk can make the change in the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out, in lines 1 and 2, page 44, the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And to amend the total to correspond to this change.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040.

Mr. LITTLE. I move to strike out lines 3 to 5, inclusive, on page 47, the provision for the education of 120 Indian pupils at Hampton, Va., appropriating $20,040.

My reason for this action is an endeavor to carry out what I understand to have been the policy of the Government toward the education of the Indians in the last six years. Hampton is a contract school. The policy of the Government has been to educate the Indian children in Indian schools under Government supervision. I understand the Hampton School to be a good school and well equipped, but it is simply a case of the use of public money in a private school. It has no recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, and there is no desire on the part of the Indian service to maintain it.

While I can not quote from that office, and having nothing direct from them, it is my opinon that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not want this appropriation, because there has been no little trouble growing out of the education of pupils in the contract schools, and the Government has got away from that proposition wherever it could. We have at least no request on the part of the Indian service for contracts of this kind. We have been enlarging almost every Government school in the country for the last six years. We are enlarging the reservation schools, enlarging the nonreservation Government schools, and I believe, as I have all the time believed, that it is only wise for the Government, where it can do so, to educate the Indians in Government schools, where the Government will not only have control of the children and supervision of the schools, but the payment of its own money.

The contract system grew out of a necessity at one time, which necessity does not exist now. I hope now that this provision for the Hampton School, which is not asked for by the Department, and which the Government can get along well without, will go out of the bill, in pursuance of the fixed policy of the Government to get away from the contract system of education as fast as possible.

This discussion has frequently arisen on the lines of sectarianism. It is claimed that this school is not sectarian. Conceding that, it is yet a contract school, and in my opinion violates the determined and fixed policy of the Government to educate the Indians in Government schools. Therefore I move that this be stricken out. It will not cripple the Indian service in any degree, in my opinion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I sincerely trust that this provision in the bill will not be stricken out. While it is true that the Hampton School is not a Government school, not in that sense similar to Carlisle, but is a private school, yet it is not a sectarian school, as my friend says, and the policy which we entered upon was not based upon the fact that the schools were contract schools which Congress desired to do away with. The wording of the provision in the preceding bills shows that. What Congress attempted was to do away with sectarian schools—it was not because they were contract schools—and Hampton School is not a sectarian school. It is an industrial school in a part of the country where we can send Indians where there is no other industrial school to which they could conveniently be sent. We could send them to Carlisle, but it does not reach the same territory that Hampton does.

The gentlemen of the Indian Committee, both of the Senate and House, who have repeatedly visited Hampton, have been very firmly convinced of the excellent work that was being done in the practical education of the Indians—in making them blacksmiths, wagon makers, harness makers, and carpenters; teaching them trades with which, when they pass from the school out into life, they can make an honest living. I do think and I do trust that the provision will not go out of this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I desire to ask him if this school is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not.

Mr. LITTLE. It does not have the recommendation of that office?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. LITTLE. Let me read the provisions of the act of 1896. I have the first original bill on this subject when this subject first came up, and the proviso of that bill is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children, and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

That was the act of 1895, being the first year that this policy was invoked. That the Government was as early as practical to make provision for the education of the Indian children in Government schools, not sectarian schools. The sectarian schools, about which we have been bothered so much, grew out of the contract schools. The contract school was the best, and while the Government was trying to get away from the sectarian schools, the Government schools were established in trying to get away from the sectarian schools. I do not say that this is not a fine school, but there are fine schools all over the country where these people can learn to be blacksmiths, carpenters, doctors, and lawyers, and all those things; but they would be contract schools, and be a part of the vicious policy that we have been trying to get rid of; and we have now reached a point where we can execute that policy without detriment to the Indians. I therefore hope that this provision will be stricken out.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the committee after a careful consideration of this subject were by a large majority in favor of retaining this provision in the bill. We saw no good reason for eliminating this provision from the bill. This school is one of the oldest Indian schools in the East, and one of the oldest in the country, and is doing one of the best works for the Indians of any of the schools throughout the country. It seems to me that there would be as good reason for striking out the provision for the Carlisle School as for this institution. There, as the chairman of the committee has well said, they are carrying on industrial work and doing as much for the Indians as in any other school in the United States. There are at least thirty or forty different tribes represented at that school, and the parents of those students come on and witness the graduation of these scholars and take great interest and pride in the work. It seems to me that it would be taking a step backward if the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas were agreed to. I sincerely trust that the bill as reported in this regard will prevail.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment will not prevail. This is a good school. It is one that has existed since about 1873. It has always received the highest praise from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Never before, Mr. Chairman, in the history of the discussion of these Indian schools has there been any objection to this school upon the ground that it was a contract school. The general objection to Indian schools, other than those conducted by the Government, has not been upon the ground that they were contract schools. The discussions in this House and in the other House show clearly that the great objection to these schools was that they were sectarian schools, and the sectarian nature of the schools was considered in a very restricted and limited way. This school does not happen to come within that peculiarly constricted construction of so-called sectarian schools. In the last session of Congress the gentleman from Arkansas said:

> Five years ago Congress determined upon a settled policy that the appropriations to sectarian schools should cease at the end of five years—a wise policy, I have no doubt.

There is no question in my mind whatever as to the character of this school. As I stated in the last session of this Congress, this school not only had a resident chaplain, but it prepared Indians for the ministry. I am glad that it does. That is one reason why I favor the appropriations for this school. There has been more hypocrisy displayed upon this question of sectarian schools for the education of Indians than upon any other question that has been discussed in Congress or by officials. In the report of the superintendent of Indian schools for last year the superintendent showed that in nearly every governmental school, under the guise of nonsectarian teaching, Indians were educated in the principles of some religion. The contention has been made that that is not an affair of the Government.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the greatest misfortune that could happen to the Indians of this country would be that they should be deprived of instruction in some religion. I do not care what religion they are educated in, but I do believe that in all of these schools where the Government provides for their education, and where these Indians can not receive religious instruction, except under governmental supervision, that we ought to provide not only for religious instruction, but should permit the Indians to select the church and school of their own faith.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Has it been determined by the Department that contract schools are superior to Government schools they have established, and if it is believed that the latter are superior schools why have any contract schools?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. There has never been any doubt that contract schools did more than the governmental schools for about $59 a head less. The people who conduct these schools devote their lives to this work. They are interested in the education and advancement of the Indians; and yet, simply because some of them were educated in accord with the principles of certain churches, there was great objection to the Government appropriating money for this so-called sectarian purpose. I believe it is one of the best schools at present receiving aid from the Government. I believe it does good work. Anybody who visits the school will be convinced of it. It is true that there is a chapel and that the Indians receive religious instruction there and attend services conducted by the ministers of the different Protestant denominations.

I am glad of it, however, and for that reason more than any other I hope that this provision will not be stricken out. The Department does not ask for the appropriation, because it has been condemning the sectarian schools; they have been trying for certain reasons to get rid of them. But anybody who will look through the report of the Commissioner will see that he not only believes that this is a good school, but hopes Congress will appropriate for it without his request.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from New York evidently did not listen to my remarks. I said the question of sectarian schools grew out of the contract school.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The gentleman knows that the contract schools could not be divorced from sectarianism.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman from New York knows anything about it, he does not suppose that the Government in the employment of its teachers would employ infidels. If the gentleman from New York will read the speech of mine that he referred to in the RECORD, he will find that one of the primary objections to the contract schools was that it was putting the Government's money into private hands. What we want is Government schools to educate them.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The gentleman from Arkansas votes for appropriations for contracts in other matters.

Mr. LITTLE. That is all true, but contract schools give us the other question.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. No; the sectarian schools give us the contract question.

Mr. LITTLE. That is true, but I do not want any of the contract question or the sectarian question either.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I want what is best for the Indians, and I hope the House will keep the appropriation in.

Mr. LITTLE. I want neither, because neither is necessary. Congress has settled its policy, and if you have a contract school you will have the sectarian question again. The question of religious teachers in private schools has no application to the question of education, because it is presumed that the Government, in the education of the Indian, will put in as teachers only people of good morality and not of any particular religion.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Does the gentleman believe that the Government schools should have religious instruction?

Mr. LITTLE. I insist that in all schools teachers should be of the highest morality and that they should be religious people.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. They may be all that, but does not the gentleman think that they should give religious teaching?

Mr. LITTLE. No; they can be religious people and people of good morality, but they need not teach religion.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. It is utterly impossible to have religious people and not have them sectarian.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if it is not a fact that there are a greater number of colored people at this school than Indians?

Mr. LITTLE. I understand so.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. And that the State of Virginia makes an appropriation for the payment of a large sum of money for the education of these colored children?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know about that.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I understand that such is the fact. Does the gentleman understand that there is no religious doctrine inculcated there?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is getting entirely away from the question, as is the gentleman from New York. It is not a question so much of religious people conducting these schools inculcating the doctrine of any particular church at the expense of the Government. I say that it is impolitic for the public moneys to be put into private hands and expended in this way in the contract schools. This provides for $167, the regular price for a scholar at a school, and there is no question of economy about it. But when you step over the line and go to one contract school, when you are asked the reason why you should not go to another, you will be without a reason.

Now, this school was left out of the appropriation last year, or one year, and it ought to be left out this year. If the Indian Department is to administer this system of Indian education, then let it be administered in Government schools. We have gone to the expense of establishing schools for this purpose, and the accommodations are abundant.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Does not the gentleman know that there are not sufficient school accommodations provided by the Government?

Mr. LITTLE. Does the Secretary of the Interior make any recommendation for an increase?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. He shows that the number of Indian children of school age exceed the sittings in the Government schools by about ten to twelve thousand.

Mr. LITTLE. And there are about 20,000 children that you can not get to attend the schools.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Here is an opportunity to furnish 150 of them with school accommodations.

Mr. LITTLE. First we have the reservation schools; and then we have the nonreservation schools, which are also Government schools. Then we have the mission schools, conducted by various denominations, and these are on the reservations when desired. They have the aid of the Indian Department, and rations are issued to the students if they are ration Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. But notwithstanding all that, there are not sufficient school accommodations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this Indian school is not a sectarian school. This question with regard to Indian schools originated at the mouth of the James River, and the settlement of the question was accomplished at the same place. The first Indian industrial school was started at Hampton, and from it have grown all the industrial schools of this country. This was the pioneer school of the whole system. It is not a sectarian school. It has rendered most effective service, and is perhaps the most complete of any of these schools, with the possible exception of Carlisle. It would be a great misfortune if this school should be done away with, and I hope no such step will be taken.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

[Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LITTLE,

The CHAIRMAN. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. LITTLE. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 14, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 150 pupils at the Indian school at Truxton Canyon, Ariz., $25,050; pay of superintendent, $1,500; general improvements, $1,000; schoolhouse, $12,000; in all, $39,550.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] to this paragraph, which seems to involve an increase of appropriation beyond that heretofore made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Following the suggestion of the gentleman, I will look this matter up in a moment. Let me say, however, that in some cases—and I presume this is one—there are many more pupils now than can reasonably be accommodated. I presume this is one of the schools where there are more scholars than the old accommodations can reasonably provide for.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will look into the matter and correct it if necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all expenditure of money appropriated for school purposes in this act shall be at all times under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in all respects in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may be from time to time prescribed by him, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That not more than $167 shall be expended for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school herein specifically appropriated for, except when, by reason of epidemic, accident, or other similar cause, the attendance is so reduced that a larger expenditure is absolutely necessary for the efficient operation of the school affected, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may allow a larger per capita expenditure, such expenditure to continue only so long as the said necessity therefor shall exist: Provided further, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That this provision shall apply to the fiscal years 1899 and 1900.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether or not there is any provision for the education of Indian children provided for in this appropriation or in other appropriations at the colleges and universities throughout the country?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. No provision is made for the education of an Indian child at a college or university.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any provision by which they can be educated at public schools other than those provided for on the reservations by this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; at the district schools in the States.

Mr. CANNON. Off the reservations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Taken from one State to another?

Mr. SHERMAN. No——

Mr. CURTIS. Only in schools located near the reservations.

Mr. CANNON. And the United States pays the expense?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I was impressed with the idea that more or less of the Indian pupils were educated at the universities and colleges of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at the expense of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be indulged a moment, I want to put in the RECORD what is being done in the way of education of Indian children, and compare it with some of the educational institutions in this country for the white children.

Commencing with 1887, the expense of the education of Indian children was $1,210,000. This sum has grown until the year 1901, when this bill carries the sum of $3,070,379.

I want to put further into the RECORD the statement that by the census of 1890 there were 248,000 Indians, all told—men, women, and children. Of this 278,000, 90,000 are in New York and the Indian Territory, and are not covered by any of these appropriations. So that there are less than 200,000 Indian population provided for, and for the school children of that number of people we make provision by appropriating $3,000,000 and over for their education.

Now, let me say further that the total attendance at the Indian schools last year—1900—is reported by the Superintendent of Schools to be 21,568. By way of comparison let me show you that the school population of the District of Columbia is in round numbers 45,000. This is over twice as great as the number of pupils in all of the Indian schools combined. Part of this Indian appropriation is for day schools and part for boarding schools, and the total cost for the year 1901 for the Indian schools, as I have shown you, is $3,070,367, while for more than twice the number of school children of the District of Columbia the total appropriation is but $1,381,326. Here is largely over double the population, and under a system of schools, as I understand it, the best on earth, and in addition to that the text-books are furnished out of this amount.

Mr. CURTIS. But the gentleman should remember that the schools in the District of Columbia are all day schools, while the schools on the Indian reservations are nearly all boarding schools.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I understand that part of them are.

Mr. CURTIS. Nearly all of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Besides that the gentlemen should remember that these day schools on the reservation give lunch to the Indian pupils—give them a meal once a day.

Mr. CANNON. I think that is probably done here also.

Mr. CURTIS. Besides that, in the District of Columbia we have one superintendent; but the Indian service has one for nearly every school. A large number of superintendents are necessary because the schools are scattered all over the country, and when you take into consideration the number of schools and the number of people employed and the fact that nearly all are boarding schools you will find that the expense is not much greater in the Indian school than the expense in the District.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in connection with his statement.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask if the figures that the gentleman quotes do not include also the construction of a number of schoolhouses?

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly. But there is a larger construction, I apprehend, in the District of Columbia than in the Indian schools.

Mr. CURTIS. How many children attend school in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CANNON. Forty-five thousand.

Mr. CURTIS. Are there 45,000 in attendance, or are there that many children of school age in the District?

Mr. CANNON. Well, substantially all of them attend.

Mr. CURTIS. We have 27,000 Indian children, in round numbers, enrolled, and the average attendance is 21,500.

Mr. CANNON. Twenty-one thousand five hundred and sixty-eight.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, before he gets away from the subject——

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. We not only furnish the board of these children and their text-books, but we clothe thousands of them.

Mr. EDDY. And pay their transportation?

Mr. SHERMAN. And pay their transportation to and from the schools. It really is hardly fair to compare the conditions in the District of Columbia with the conditions in the Indian schools.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I call attention to these facts for the purpose of placing in the RECORD a statement of the expenditure that is made for the education of Indian children as compared with the expenditure that is made in the District of Columbia.

Now, it is proper that I should say that I do not begrudge all proper expenditure that is made for the education of children anywhere within the boundaries of the United States. I say all "proper" expenditure, and I emphasize "proper." The gentleman from New York said he thought it would be well to educate the heart, perhaps, more than the mind of the child. The truth of the matter is that you can not, by a hypodermic process of book-learning and training, put much education either of the heart or the mind into people who have not achieved their own civilization.

Mr. Chairman, the statement which I wish to print in the RECORD is as follows:

The census of 1890 placed the total Indian population at 248,253, including about 90,000 in New York and the Five Civilized Tribes, with whom the Government has nothing to do so far as education and support are concerned, leaving less than 160,000 Indians whose children participate in the Government provision for education.

The total attendance at all Indian schools (boarding and day) for 1900 is reported at 21,568.

The school population of the District of Columbia is about 45,000.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

1887	$1,210,915.00	1896	$2,056,515.00
1888	1,181,415.00	1897	2,518,815.00
1889	1,348,015.00	1898	2,630,771.35
1890	1,379,568.13	1899	2,638,390.00
1891	1,842,770.00	1900	2,936,080.00
1892	2,216,650.00	1901	3,070,367.00
1893	2,312,385.00
1894	2,243,482.38	Total	31,627,833.86

The total Indian population is about 250,000.

The public schools of the District of Columbia, the finest system probably in the world, cost, including buildings, free books, etc.:

1899	$1,256,375

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman reporting this bill a question. The gentleman from Illinois speaks of the school system as being a uniform school system. I should like to ask if you have adopted, and if not, why not, a uniform schoolbook system in the Indian schools? We have recently adopted it in Tennessee, and it works well. It saves a great deal of money and gives us a fine lot of books. I understand the State of Texas, and in fact a great number of States, have adopted that system.

Mr. CURTIS. The Superintendent of Indian Schools selects a number of books, a list of which is published, and this list is sent to each agency. The teacher in charge selects from the list of books furnished by the Indian Office.

Mr. GAINES. Who does this?

Mr. CURTIS. The Superintendent of Schools, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, sends a list to each teacher at the Indian schools, and they select from that list.

Mr. GAINES. The point I made was not so much about the distributing of the books, but whether the books were uniform.

Mr. CURTIS. In that one school they are uniform; yes.

Mr. GAINES. In other words, you know in the old blue-back spelling-book schools that we had years ago different children had different books, and they did not have the uniform system that we have now.

Mr. CURTIS. They have the same books in the same school.

Mr. GAINES. In other words, they have a uniform book system.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it. Of course they may use a different kind of book in one school from that in another school.

Mr. GAINES. That is the exact point of my inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. But they use the same books in the same school.

Mr. GAINES. I will give the House the benefit of an observation that I have recently made in my own State. The people of Tennessee, as in a great many other States, have had wrung out of them immense prices—exorbitant prices—for schoolbooks, and they have been changed from year to year. Whenever a different teacher would come in he would want a different book; and when the child would go to attend another session, he would have to get a different book, and so on. In other words, each teacher had a different book and recommended a different book. The result was that the people were practically robbed of cheap books. The legislature has adopted what is known as the universal book system, and the supreme court has upheld the law, which is working admirably and saving a great deal of money to the parents. For instance, a book that formerly cost a dollar we get now for about 33 cents, with the privilege of turning in an old book at about 10 per cent of the original cost. I do not know what this system is; I know nothing about what kind of books you are using, but I give the benefit of this information to the gentlemen who, I am satisfied, know more about it than I can possibly show that I know.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to go back to page 42, where the committee agreed to an amendment striking out the words "and fifty," in line 1, and that the following changes be made to correspond with that amendment: In lines 2 and 3 strike out "$25,050" and insert "$16,700;" in line 8 strike out "nine" and insert "one;" and in line 9 strike out "six" and insert "three" and strike out "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 1, strike out the words "and fifty;" in line 2 strike out the word "twenty-five;" in line 3 strike out the words "thousand and fifty" and insert "sixteen thousand seven hundred;" so as to read "$16,700;" in line 8, after "forty," strike out "nine" and insert "one;" and in line 9 strike out "six" and insert "three" and strike out "and fifty;" so as to read "$43,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 43, line 4, to correct a clerical error, strike out the word "and" preceding the word "five" and insert the word "hundred" after the word "five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, line 4, strike out the word "and" and insert "one hundred" after the word "five;" so as to read "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we can return to page 34, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has an amendment which he will offer, to take the place of that section following line 22.

Mr. LACEY. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has prepared a substitute for the amendment which I have drafted, which I think is perhaps in better form than the one I had prepared, and I yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "further," line 22, page 34, down to and including the word "clerks," in line 13, page 35, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That hereafter the clerks of the district courts in the Indian Territory shall account to the United States for all fees earned and collected by them in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Attorney-General shall prescribe. They shall annually pay over to the Treasurer of the United States all such fees collected and earned by them in excess of the necessary expenses incurred and paid by them for attendance on court, record books, stationery, and clerk hire, subsequent to May 31, 1900; such expenses to be allowed and retained by said clerks on accounts approved by the judge of the court when accompanied by proper vouchers. And such clerks shall hereafter be paid the sum of $500 each per annum for all extra services in addition to their regular salary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill, with amendments, favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12904) making appropriation for the Indian service, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendments? If not, they will be submitted to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for the Military Academy.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the appropriation bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12846) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. HULL. This is simply the first reading. It does not dispense with the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. KING. If the bill is to be read by paragraphs, I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I only want to detain the committee one minute. The bill is unanimously reported by the committee, and there is just one paragraph in it in my judgment that a point of order would lie against, and that is in the twenty-third page, in the paragraph making appropriation of $10,000 for a centennial celebration at Westpoint. The balance of the bill is simply the appropriations necessary from year to year, a little increase in the bill on different lines because Congress at its last session provided for an increase of the corps of cadets to the number of 100.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa how much more this bill carries than the bill last year.

Mr. HULL. Twenty-five thousand dollars, including the $10,000 I have referred to. But I want to say in fairness to the committee of the House that the bill will finally, in my judgment, have an addition made for water supply. The data was not sufficient for us to make the appropriation at this time, but Congress, if it shall later have the information that will justify it, will be called upon to purchase Long Pond, and there will be an additional appropriation for that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much?

Mr. HULL. We have not got the estimates yet.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much does the bill carry in the aggregate?

Mr. HULL. It carries in the aggregate $700,151, and was $674,306 for current year. The additional number of cadets and the absolute necessity of making absolute provision for them accounts for all the increase. I will say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT] were all in thorough accord with the entire action of the committee. We cut off every item which could be dispensed with.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And did they understand that the bill would be called up this afternoon?

Mr. HULL. That it would be called up to-day, if it could be reached. They have gone home with the understanding that if there was any fight on the bill, we would not attempt to pass it, but if there was no fight it was perfectly satisfactory to every one of them that it should be called up and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Iowa intend to have any general debate on the bill?

Mr. HULL. I did not suppose it would be necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My colleague, Mr. GAINES, wants ten minutes.

Mr. HULL. The arrangement with the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs was that there would be no general debate, but after the recess, when the Army bill came up, we would make provision for reasonable debate, and it was satisfactory to all the members. One gentleman from New York, not a member of the committee, wanted time, and he said that was perfectly satisfactory to him; that he had no objection to a single feature of the bill, but if he could say a few words on military matters in general when the Army bill came up he would be satisfied.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My colleague, Mr. GAINES, desires ten minutes. Of course he could get it under the five-minute rule, but he prefers to take it under general debate.

Mr. HULL. He could get it under the five-minute rule just as well.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; but he would have to get consent for an extension.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate close in ten minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] to occupy the ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate close in ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to challenge the attention of this honorable body to some of the history that pertains to and, as I think, sheds light on the meaning of the word "land," as used in the term "the supreme law of the land," found in the Constitution, which ordains:

> This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

I contend, as here used, the word "land" includes and means the land or territory of the United States, composed of States, and territory organized and unorganized. The debates in the Convention which framed our Federal Constitution show that the word "land" was substituted for the words "respective States and several States," found in the first and second propositions submitted to this Convention. The former reads:

> Resolved, That the legislative acts of the United States made by virtue and in pursuance of the articles of union, and all treaties made and ratified under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the respective States, as far as those acts or treaties shall relate to the said States or their citizens and inhabitants; and that the judiciaries of the several States shall be bound thereby in their decision, anything in the respective laws of the individual States to the contrary notwithstanding.

This Convention met in the spring of 1787, and on July 26 adjourned until Monday, August 6, "that the committee might prepare and report the constitution."

On reconvening, the committee on detail, to whom this resolution had been referred, reported the same or second proposition with certain changes, in the following words:

> The acts of the legislature of the United States, made in pursuance of this Constitution, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the several States, and of their citizens and inhabitants; and the judges of the several States shall be bound thereby in their decisions; anything in the constitutions or laws of the several States to the contrary notwithstanding.

And without debate, on August 23, on motion of Mr. Rutledge, the Convention unanimously amended this resolution, as reported, by substituting this provision:

> This Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the several States and of the citizens and inhabitants; and the judges, etc.

Later, after the words "all treaties made," "or which shall be made" was inserted, which meant to "obviate all doubt concerning the force of treaties," says Mr. Madison.

Finally the committee on style and arrangement reported this provision as it now reads in our Constitution and without explaining why the word "land" was substituted for "States."

It will be noticed that the word "constitution" was prefixed, and, by the subsequent changes, declared literally to be "the supreme law of the land;" that the words "acts of the legislature of the United States" were succeeded by the laws and treaties made by the authority of the United States, and that the words "and of their citizens and inhabitants" were eliminated entirely because unnecessary, since the "citizens and inhabitants of the "land"—the States and Territories of the United States—would be bound and protected by the Constitution, which was declared to be "the supreme law of the land." Such a Constitution extended to them by being the law of the (their) "land."

Declaring this people should be bound by the law of the "land" was an unnecessary declaration. Finally we notice that the words "several States" were omitted, and in their stead the significant and broader term "land" was used.

This provision of the Constitution, thus amended, not only declared, in so many words, that the Constitution is the supreme law, but went further, and declared it was the supreme law of the land.

The laws in question of the United States are:

1. This Constitution, created by "the people."
2. The statutes enacted by Congress.
3. Treaties made by the Senate and President.

The Congress—House and Senate—enacts a law for a Territory; it is the law of such "land" and the United States.

Why? The Constitution says so.

The Senate makes a treaty acquiring territory—lands. Is not that treaty law, and the law of the territory acquired and of the United States? Why? The Constitution says so, although Congress, the regular law or statute making power, does not make such treaty, but the Senate does by virtue of the Constitution, which so ordains.

Then why should not the Constitution, which "is" law, "the supreme law," and of the "land," be the law of such acquired territory?

The Constitution says it is such law of such "land" and of the United States—i. e., States and Territories.

I am at a loss to see how the Constitution can make a treaty a law of a territory and yet the Constitution be not the law and supreme law of such land. The very words that make a treaty such law also declare the Constitution to be the same thing—the law of the land, the States, and the land or territory of or belonging to the United States.

The Constitution is self-declaratory in this provision. The fact that all its provisions are not necessary, or, to use the usual term, not "applicable" to such "land," arises from a condition in and of such land and not from the nonapplication of the Constitution or a defect in it. It is, nevertheless, the law there—the highest law, and should be—as it witnesses and protects human rights, life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, things which make life worth the effort to live. Hence the Constitution then is and should be the self-declared law of our land until the people—not Congress nor the Senate nor President—say otherwise.

Confessedly the Constitution is not the law of any foreign "land." It is the law of this "land."

Why was this change from the "several States" made to that of "land." No reasons are given in the debates. It is perfectly plain that such a change was necessary, and known to be necessary by the members of this great Convention, nine of whom were also members of the Congress at this time. Congress had twice requested the several States to cede to the United States their unappropriated territory. These requests were made before this Convention met.

There had been four cessions of territory made before it convened. All cessions were made by public statute. They were notorious and important facts and well known to both the Congress and the Convention.

Indeed, while this Convention was in session, August 9, 1787, three days after it reconvened, another cession of territory was made to the United States. Still later, and after the Constitution had been ratified, other cessions were made.

In replying to a remark made in this Convention by Mr. Madison on the subject of the basis of representation, Mr. Gorham said:

> It is not to be supposed that the Government will last so long as to produce this effect. Can it be supposed that this vast country, including the western territory, will, one hundred and fifty years hence, remain one nation?

So we see that on August 8, 1787, a distinguished member of this Convention, in the presence of Mr. Sherman, Mr. Madison, Mr. Ellsworth, Mr. Morris, and others, then engaged in a colloquy, treated, as did the members of the Convention there and then, by at least their silence, this "Western territory" as "part of this vast country."

It is perfectly plain that the Convention did treat this territory as part of the "land" composing the United States.

In July, 1787, the old Congress passed the celebrated "Ordinance of 1787" for the government of this territory, and declared it was then a part of the United States and was to remain so. And Congress so treated it. The people of this territory were "citizens and inhabitants," therefore, of the United States, and this ordinance acknowledged and agreed to protect each and every one of them in all of their fundamental rights, giving them, as near as possible, local self-government.

Nothing but the "law of the land" or "constitutionally" enacted laws could, says the Ordinance, interfere with their rights. Was it not then very natural for the framers of our Constitution to make and literally declare that our Constitution should be the law of this "land," as well as the States? The States having local self-government, it was right and proper for Congress to be empowered to govern this territory and protect "the citizens and inhabitants" thereof in all their rights. Hence, the fundamental law, then being made, was broadened so as not only to be the supreme law of the several States, but the supreme law of the land composed of States and Territories, present and future.

The first and second propositions would have confined this supreme law to "the several States;" it could not have applied, at least without straining the timbers of the Constitution, to any other "land" than "the several States."

This ordinance of 1787 was made to operate in our Territories, and not in the States. The Constitution was made to operate in both the States and Territories, throughout the United States, or throughout our country, or throughout our Republic, or throughout the American empire. Our Supreme Court, past and present, and great law writers have repeatedly used these terms in referring to the operation of our laws or the limits of our Republic.

Mr. Justice Baldwin, in his work entitled "Origin and Nature of the Constitution," makes the same application for the word "land" that I do. He says:

> The Constitution was intended for posterity, through all times; and for the "land," the whole territory and all the States old and new.

To have said that the Constitution is the supreme law of the States would possibly not have been as broad term as the word "land," for we know that the Supreme Court in an early case construed the word "territory," as used in the Constitution in another section, to mean "lands," and has never retracted this definition, for it was a fact that our territory was mostly composed then of vacant land or territory, and that court has held that the word "United States" includes States and Territory.

And on that point I quote again from Justice Baldwin, who bases his contention upon the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States, of which he was, as you know, a distinguished member at one time. He says:

> This term United States designates the whole American Empire.
> It [United States] is the name given to our great Republic, composed of States and Territory (5 Wheaton, 514), constituent parts of one great empire (5 Wheaton, 414), who have formed a confederated government (12 Wheaton, 314; 2 Pet., 590-591), by the act of the people of the "Great Empire;" the Great Republic, the American Empire, the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in 114 U. S., 546, Chicago, etc., against McGlynn, held that where property was ceded to the United States all laws in contravention of the Constitution of the United States yielded to the Constitution and laws of the land; and while discussing a territorial question and the Constitution, declared in Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. Rep., that it was unnecessary to extend the Constitution to our territories.

Again, the articles of the confederation were framed in 1777. Territory was ceded as early as 1781 to the then "United States." The old Government was succeeded by the Constitution in 1787-88. The ordinance of 1787, passed to, and did, govern this territory, contained rights personal and political—fundamental, that were not to be and could not be abrogated save by the "judgment of his peers" or "the law of the land" or by "constitutionally" enacted laws, says this ordinance.

Our new or present Constitution provided for these very rights, and declared that "this Constitution and the laws of the United States" and our treaties "is the supreme law of the land," and provided expressly for the keeping inviolate the pledges made in this ordinance by article 6, section 1: "All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the confederation," and the Supreme Court has repeatedly so held. (10 Howard, 94-97, approving 3 Howard, 96.)

Now, following right along in the same article 6, section 2, we find this declared: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States," etc., "is the supreme law of the land." What land? The "land" then ceded, then in question, and to be ceded for all time. We were then treating about territory and the "citizens and inhabitants" thereof.

By the very words of this ordinance these people and this "land" were to have the full protection of the "law of the land," which was then the articles of confederation, and now "this Constitution," which in 1787-88 we, "the people," said "is the supreme law of the land." And the court so holds:

> The Constitution was, in the language of the ordinance—
> That is, of 1787—
> adopted by common consent, and the people of the Territories must necessarily be regarded as parties to it and bound by it, and entitled to its benefits, as well as the people of the then existing States. It became the supreme law throughout the United States. And, so far as any obligations of good faith had been previously incurred by the ordinance, they were faithfully carried into execution by the power and authority of the new Government. (10 Howard, 96, Strader vs. Graham.)

Justices Taney, Wayne, McKinley, Daniel, Nelson, Woodbury, Grier, McLean, and Catron then composed this court. The court affirms a similar holding in Pollard vs. Hagan (3 Howard, 212), an opinion delivered when Justice Story graced that court. In this case the court said:

> And all constitutional laws are binding on the people in the new States and the old ones whether they consent to be bound by them or not. Every constitutional act of Congress is passed by the will of the people of the United States, expressed through their representatives, on the subject-matter of the enactment.

And when so enacted they are the law of the land by their "own force" in State or Territory. The court continued:

> And when so passed it becomes the supreme law of the land and operates by its own force on the subject-matter in whatever State or Territory it may happen to be. The proposition, therefore, that such a law can not operate upon the subject-matter of its enactment without the express consent of the people of the new State where it may happen to be contains its own refutation and requires no further examination.

"And when so passed it (law) becomes the supreme law of the land." What land? The court answers: "State or Territory," "and operates by its own force."

Can a statute, dependent upon it, do more than the Constitution? The Constitution is self-declaratory, operating in the "land" whereof it is the law—the supreme law.

In Graham's case the court further said:

> In fact, when the Constitution was adopted the settlement of that vast territory was barely begun, and the people who filled it and formed the great and populous States that now cover it became inhabitants of the territory after the Constitution was adopted, and migrated upon the faith that its protection and benefits would be extended to them and that they would in due time, according to its provisions and spirit, be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the old States.

The Constitution being the law of this Territory—"the land"—this court has repeatedly held the Constitution repealed this ordinance. In Graham's case the court so held:

> As we have already said, it (ordinance) ceased to be in force upon the adoption of the Constitution, and can not now be the source of jurisdiction of any description in this court.

The court shows the fact, we may add, that Congress recognized this repeal, and says:

> These provisions owed their legal validity and force after the Constitution was adopted, and while the territorial government continued, to the act of Congress of August 7, 1789, which adopted and continued the ordinance of 1787, and carried its provisions into execution, with some modifications, which were necessary to adapt its form of government to the new Constitution.

This clearly proves the Constitution is the law of the Territory, otherwise it could not have repealed this Territorial statute. All this goes to show conclusively that the Constitution is the law of our territories, because the law of the "land," or "throughout the United States," as the court in these cases say, and that it extends to the territory by reason of the fact it is the law of the land. And as Justice Marshall said in (Cohens vs. Virginia, 6 Wheaton, 112), in construing the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, giving Congress exclusive power and right to legislate for the "seat of government," and the second clause of the sixth article: "This Constitution, etc., is the supreme law of the land"—"binds all the United States."

He had in 5 Wheaton, in the Loughborough case, already defined, as we have shown, the words "United States" to mean our States and Territories, and hence in the Cohens case he uses the briefer term "all the United States" in speaking of a case involving a law passed by Congress giving the city of Washington in the District or "Territory of Columbia" certain rights which conflicted with a statute of the State of Virginia.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, read the following:

For pay of 481 cadets, at $540 each, $229,500.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that this paragraph should be amended. A year ago I made a similar suggestion when this item was reached in the Military Academy bill; and the answer of the gentleman then in charge of the bill—the gentleman from Rhode Island, I believe—supplemented by his colleague on the committee—the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH]—was that the paragraph was in the usual form.

I accepted their positive statements at that time as correct. I have since found that in that bill, as well as in this, the committee has not followed the usual phraseology; and the departure from the accustomed language may make some embarrassment at the Treasury Department. So, unless the gentleman in charge of the bill will offer such an amendment, I will move to strike out so much as specifies the number of cadets and the rate of pay for each, so as to make appropriation for the pay of cadets, be the number large or small.

If gentlemen will refer to the Book of Estimates, page 163, they will find in the middle of the page that the Department has called attention to the discrepancy. It is not usual to employ the phraseology which we find in this bill. If we refer to the act of February 27, 1899, and other acts prior to the last, when this error was adopted by the Committee on Military Affairs, we find that the appropriation was—such and such amounts.

When you appropriate for a specified number of cadets at so much for each you should be accurate as to the arithmetic. We should appropriate the amount necessary, without limiting the number of cadets. Unless the gentleman from Iowa will move an amendment, I will myself move the proposition I have indicated—to strike out the number and pay of cadets. Both are fixed by law, and need not be repeated in this bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care whether the number be inserted or not. Four hundred and eighty-one cadets, if I remember correctly, are now provided for by law. The number which we propose to appropriate for in this bill is the average number in the Academy; and according to the testimony given before the committee this appropriation will meet the expenditures of the Academy on account of the pay of cadets. It seems to me that if we follow the language of the estimates we are not doing a bad thing. But this matter is not vital one way or another. Either way the same amount of money is appropriated and for the same purpose—the pay of the corps of cadets.

If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is anxious about the language, I care nothing for the words used. Personally, I will vote against a change in the language. This gives the House the information that there are 481 cadets, and they are paid $540 each per annum.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the language of this provision does make some difference, but my chief concern now is to show the correctness of my statement, made in the last session, to the effect that the language then used, and now repeated in this bill, was not the language of previous appropriation acts. I now call attention to the previous laws, copies of which I hold in my hand, to show that such is not the case. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out, in lines 3 and 4, the words "481 cadets at $540 each," and insert the word "cadets," so as to read—
For pay of cadets, $229,500.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCRAE) there were—ayes 23.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, there is no use in taking up the time; it is a matter of indifference. Let it go.

So, no further count being demanded, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if the faculty at the Military Academy have the power to expel cadets who engage in the practice of hazing.

Mr. HULL. I can only say in response to the gentleman from Texas that last year they did expel two, I think, if not more, and the present Superintendent is urging the most stringent measures and has given explicit instructions in the matter, and is doing everything in his power to break up the barbarous practice.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Because I notice in the printed testimony, in connection with the investigation now pending, that certain of the cadets themselves have admitted, on the witness stand, that they have been engaged in hazing.

Mr. HULL. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. And for my part I think the man who engages in hazing ought to be expelled, and every professor who permits it ought to be dismissed. I do not believe it necessary to make a man a brute in order to make him a soldier, and if the practice can not be abolished the Academy ought to be. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. And the Naval Academy as well.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Unquestionably.

Mr. HULL. I agree fully with what the gentleman says, and that the same stricture should apply to both of the national schools. When the reports come in from the committees who are now examining the matter, the House will have ample opportunity to take action upon it.

I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one furnace and connection, complete, for one set of quarters belonging to the cadet quartermaster's department and occupied by one of its employees, to be immediately available, $250.

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Is any provision made for the purchase of Tabasco sauce? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Well, we are making provision for the Academy, and if they want to buy Tabasco sauce I suppose they can buy it.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12846, the Military Academy appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment and with favorable recommendation.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Speaker, this morning, in answer to a question from the Chair, I stated that I had been paired the day before yesterday on the bill that passed yesterday. On examination I found that I was not paired, and would like the statement made.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman will be incorporated in the RECORD.

THE APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Census to report back the bill (H. R. 12740) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Twelfth Census, with a favorable recommendation.

I will state that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CRUMPACKER, and the gentleman from Maine, Mr. BURLEIGH, each desires to submit a minority report.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority of the committee, I beg leave to submit at this time the views we entertain, and ask to have them printed with the report of the committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have a statement embodying supplemental views on the part of Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. HEATWOLE, who are necessarily absent and asked me to submit them when this report was made. I have also some views of my own with reference to a particular part of the measure, which I desire to have embodied in the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reports back the bill H. R. 12740, the apportionment bill, which, together with the views of gentlemen representing the minority, will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The report of the committee and the views of the minority will be printed together as one document.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to give notice that on the reconvening of the House after the holiday recess I shall desire to take the bill up for consideration.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did the gentleman from Illinois name any particular day?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not name any particular day, but it is my purpose to consult with the Speaker about the day that will be most convenient for the consideration of the bill, and at as early a date as possible I shall ask for the consideration of it.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Illinois consider this a privileged matter that he can call up at any time?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no doubt of it, under the ruling of the Chair.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into the District of Alaska for 1900, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUTLER, until January 8, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DINSMORE, for the rest of this week, on account of sickness.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the urgent deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 12838) and to move to concur in two Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, calls up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the purpose of concurring in the amendments of the Senate. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is almost impossible to get a fair understanding of the amendments from the reading. I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois make some statement.

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman that there is a thousand dollars for the Senate contingent fund, and there is one other amendment of $10,000 for the observation of a total eclipse of the sun, which is to take place in Sumatra. I was not quite sure whether it could be put off or not, and I left it out when we passed the bill through the House; but evidently the Senate inquired and found that it was to come off on time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When is that time?

Mr. CANNON. That is in May next, and it is halfway around the earth and some distance inland. I am only telling you now what the man at the head of this Observatory told me, that it was the most extraordinary eclipse in the tide of time. I think he said it would last about nineteen minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman wherein that eclipse will differ from our late eclipse—I mean the late eclipse of the sun?

Mr. CANNON. It is the Sumatra sun, and the eclipse is longer. Our baby was shorter. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell us the difference between that and the eclipse of the sun we had last May?

Mr. CANNON. I think there is no difference except in the length of it. I have no pride in it, but, nevertheless, I suppose it must go.

Mr. BARTLETT. Why is it urgent?

Mr. CANNON. Well, if they go at all, they must be getting ready, because it is a long way to Sumatra.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What is the amount?

Mr. CANNON. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much is the total amount added to our bill by the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. Eleven thousand dollars altogether—$1,000 for the Senate contingent fund and this item of $10,000 for the observation of the eclipse.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

PROGRAMME OF BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that to-morrow no business is likely to be transacted except by unanimous consent. I would inquire of the Chair if I am correct in that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in answer to the gentleman from New York, that of course the House must decide the question as to what business is to be taken up; but the Chair would be glad to put before the House a number of matters to-morrow by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. I make this suggestion because it is very evident that we shall have no quorum to-morrow and in order that the members may understand it.

The SPEAKER. That is evident to all; but it is the purpose of the Chair to ask consideration of some matters by unanimous consent of the House, and those matters only.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, relating to an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who were members of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for accrediting the United States consul-general at Constantinople an agent at Sofia, Bulgaria—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with the draft of a bill, recommendations that a certain lot in Woodland Cemetery, Quincy, Ill., be transferred to that city—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Carrabelle Harbor, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Columbia River, between the foot of The Dalles Rapids and the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting an estimate for increase of salary of superintendent of nurses at the Washington Asylum—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Light-House Board relating to the establishment of a light-house district in Porto Rico and adjacent waters—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 21, 1900.

The Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God, we come into Thy presence bowed under the heavy weight of grief and sorrow as we hear the news that the wife of the President of the Senate has been called suddenly from earth to the invisible world. Our hearts are stirred with unspeakable sympathy for Thy servant, the Presiding Officer of the Senate. Comfort and uphold him as he is stricken and left alone by this bereavement. Grant, O Lord, to minister to him that only consolation which can come at such an hour.

Let Thy Heavenly blessing be upon all the members of this body and their families. Protect and guide us; and when our last hour shall come may we pass quietly in the faith and hope of the Gospel of Jesus Christ into Thy presence and at Thy right hand. Through our blessed Mediator, Jesus Christ, Thy Son. Amen.

The Secretary read the following letter:

UNITED STATES SENATE, December 21, 1900.

I hereby appoint Hon. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS, Senator from the State of Indiana, to preside over the Senate during my absence.

WM. P. FRYE, President pro tempore.

Mr. FAIRBANKS thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses being until Thursday, January 3, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

December 20, 1900.

TREATY ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

The injunction of secrecy was removed from the convention between the United States and Great Britain to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and to remove any objection which might arise out of the convention commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and also from all votes on amendments and on the final ratification.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 21, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

Almighty and most merciful God, in Whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, fill us, we beseech Thee, with the spirit of Christmas, which is good will, that we may join our voices, from our hearts, with the angelic chorus which has been sounding down the ages from the first Christmas morn, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." So let that chorus sound on until all people of all climes shall hear and add their voices to it, that peace shall reign supreme in every heart.

Amid the joys and festivities of this season of the year a cloud has come over our Congressional family. One of its employees has met with a serious accident. We pray that he may be blessed with patience to bear his suffering.

The sad tidings comes to us of the death of one of the members of this House. We pray Thee to comfort the bereaved and the broken hearted. Again, the sad news has been borne to us that the President pro tempore of the Senate has been stricken by the loss of his companion. O Lord, strengthen him to bear his sorrow, and quicken us all with larger faith and hope and confidence in Thee, that when the hour comes that we shall be called upon to pass over the river of death we shall go forward without fear, looking to Thee, the Master, the Builder of all, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL AT SKAGWAY, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Committee on the Judiciary:

That the letter of the Attorney-General of December 19, 1900, to the Committee on Appropriations, concerning the acquisition of property under the act of June 6, 1900, for a court-house and jail at Skagway, Alaska, be printed as a House document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. This is a request for unanimous consent, and it is for the purpose of making it a House document. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, information comes from the document room that there is a great demand for the report on the apportionment bill; and, in the absence of the chairman of that committee, I ask that a thousand additional copies be printed, to go through the document room; that includes, of course, the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a thousand extra copies of House Report 2130, bearing upon the apportionment bill, to include the views of the minority, be printed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of several gentlemen around me, I ask that the number be made 1,500.

The SPEAKER. The request is modified to include 1,500. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOLDING COURTS OF EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12395) to provide for the holding of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts for the eastern district of Arkansas shall be held at the times and places as follows, to wit:

For the western division, at Little Rock on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October;

For the eastern division, at Helena on the second Mondays in March and October;

For the northern division, at Batesville on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

Mr. MERCER. Would the gentleman from Arkansas permit an inquiry?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. How large a town is Batesville?

Mr. TERRY. It has about 3,000 inhabitants.

Mr. MERCER. Is that the only place in the district that court is held?

Mr. TERRY. Oh, no; court is held in several places—Batesville, Little Rock, and Helena.

Mr. MERCER. What provision has been made for court-house purposes at Batesville?

Mr. TERRY. I do not recollect of any United States building there, but they have been holding court there for years.

Mr. MERCER. It is a county seat, I suppose.

Mr. TERRY. It is the county seat of Independence. The bill makes no change except at Little Rock, and is recommended by the Federal judge.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN INDIANS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8966) for the relief of certain Indians in the Indian Territory who desire to sell their lands and improvements and emigrate elsewhere.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the Clerk to read the bill as amended, because that is the bill I desire to call up.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. What is the regular order to-day?

The SPEAKER. This is Friday.

Mr. SIMS. Then I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. LACEY. That means we can do nothing.

Mr. SIMS. Unless there can be an arrangement made to have an early day in January to take up the Private Calendar——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. SIMS. Unless we can have a day given, I shall demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first Friday in January, after the adjournment, be substituted for to-day for bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

DEATH OF HON. RICHARD ALSOP WISE.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I announce the death of my late colleague, the Hon. RICHARD ALSOP WISE, which occurred at his home, in the city of Williamsburg, at an early hour this morning. At some future time, of which I shall give notice, I desire to afford the House the opportunity of paying tributes to the life and public services of my deceased colleague. At this time I beg leave to offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia presents for immediate consideration the resolutions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. RICHARD A. WISE, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of seventeen members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Williamsburg, and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to; and in pursuance thereof the Speaker appointed the following members of the House:

Mr. WEEKS of Michigan, Mr. ALDRICH of Alabama, Mr. KAHN of California, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, Mr. BRICK of Indiana, Mr. JONES of Virginia, Mr. SWANSON of Virginia, Mr. OTEY of Virginia, Mr. RIXEY of Virginia, Mr. HAY of Virginia, Mr. LAMB of Virginia, Mr. QUARLES of Virginia, Mr. RHEA of Virginia, Mr. LASSITER of Virginia, Mr. LLOYD of Missouri, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly, the House (at 12 o'clock and 21 minutes), in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, January 3, 1901, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1901.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

HORACE CHILTON, a Senator from the State of Texas, and JOSEPH SIMON, a Senator from the State of Oregon, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 21, 1900, was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900. It is provided in the law that it shall be printed, so that no reference is necessary. It will be printed and lie on the table.

UNOCCUPIED PUBLIC PROPERTY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of the unproductive and unoccupied property leased by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MERCANTILE MARINE SUBSIDIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting a list of books (with reference to periodicals) on mercantile marine subsidies; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INTERNATIONAL MARINE CONFERENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the American delegates to the International Marine Conference, inclosing the draft of a proposed amendment to the acts of Congress establishing international rules for the prevention of collisions at sea; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims, relating to the vessel schooner Olive, George Smith, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of S. S. Louisa Cochrane, executrix of William Cohrane, deceased, vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DRY DOCK ON COLUMBIA RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the board of naval officers appointed to determine the desirability of locating and constructing a dry dock on the Columbia River, Oregon.

The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine. The returns contain two printed reports from the Secretary of War and the Engineer Department, which it will probably not be necessary to print, and also a report of the board, which is in typewriting, and which should be printed.

Mr. HALE. Let the report be printed, but let the other papers go to the committee without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be ordered, then, that the report of the board shall be printed and referred and the maps and other papers will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs without printing.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF NEW YORK, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate 11 communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of New York, Arkansas, Virginia, Connecticut, Massachusetts, South Carolina, California, Florida, West Virginia, Montana, and Idaho; which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,200 for three clerks of class 2 in the office of the Light-House Board, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $225,000 for the purchase of land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, to be used to erect additional batteries and buildings for troops, intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $264.59 to pay Henry B. Davis for surveying work done by him in Montana, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $91,600 for the support of the Puyallup Indian School, on the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment relative to the purchase of law books for each of the circuit courts of appeal of the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TOWNE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 to reimburse the city of Duluth, Minn., for money expended by it in the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works in the harbor of said city in the years 1870, 1871, and 1872, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $70,000 for improvements at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $815.38 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Frank E. Coe for wages, board, and provisions of employees engaged in subduing a forest fire on the public lands of the United States in the State of Wyoming, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,400 to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ patrols to guard against and extinguish forest fires on the White Earth and Red Lake Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment proposing to restore the annuities and funds of the Sisseton and Wahpeton and of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians to the status they maintained prior to the act of February 16, 1863, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit an amendment to the river and harbor bill and with it a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey giving a geological description of the Coosa River Valley in Alabama, which I move be printed as a document and referred, with the amendment, to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

SUBMARINE TORPEDO BOAT HOLLAND.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, it was Ordered, That the letter of the Secretary of the Navy on the subject of the submarine torpedo boat Holland be printed, the injunction of secrecy having been removed therefrom.

NATIONAL STANDARDIZING BUREAU.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, it was Ordered, That the report of hearing on Senate bill No. 4680, to establish a national standardizing bureau, be printed as a document, and that 200 copies in addition to the usual number be printed for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Committee on Commerce.

REVISION OF STATUTES RELATING TO PATENTS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following order:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 extra copies of Senate Document No. 20, second session Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have had an estimate made. The cost will not reach $500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is agreed to.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following order:

Ordered, That 1,000 extra copies of Senate Report No. 1771, second session Fifty-sixth Congress, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the printing come within the cost of $500?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are only 10 pages, and it is all in stereotyped plate now.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut what bill that is. It is merely designated by number. Is it the Army bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; it is the Army bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the order will be agreed to.

CLAIMS OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what sums of money, if any, have been paid by the United States upon the claim of the New York Indians for compensation for lands in Kansas, growing out of the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek on January 15, 1838, or subsequent treaties; and if any part of said claims have been paid, to inform the Senate to what person or persons such sums were paid, and upon what authority they were paid, and to transmit to the Senate a copy of all powers of attorney or other authority upon which said sums, if any, were paid.

MINING LOCATIONS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged that mining locations are made in great numbers under so-called powers of attorney, in violation of the principles of the mining laws of the United States, and also that large tracts of land where no mineral discoveries have been made are located as placer claims, and thereby monopolizing without right the public domain: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate these matters and report by bill or otherwise.

PAYMENTS TO SISSETON AND WAHPETON INDIANS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of all recommendations, requests, and papers on file in relation to the payment of money belonging to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians to said Indians since November 6, 1900, and to inform the Senate whether he informed said Indians, or any of them, or any other person, previous to November 6 that he would make said payment after that date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

TRANSPORTATION RATES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be authorized and directed to fully investigate whether there now exist any association or associations of railroad companies, or of railroad officials representing such companies, formed for the purpose of controlling and restraining competition in transportation rates of traffic over lines from points between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, which operate similarly to the association known as the "Trans Missouri Railway Association," that was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be an unlawful combination and in violation of the "anti-trust law;" and if so, the manner of operation of said associations or association, and the extent thereof; and that the said commission is directed to report the results of such investigation, together with their recommendations in the premises, to the Senate at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I so move.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate copies of all instructions sent to the officers of the Government in the Philippines since May 1, 1898, and orders issued by officers of the Government in the Philippines in relation to the conduct of the war and in relation to the government of that country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let the resolution go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule, and it will be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12904) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 12395) to provide for the holding of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 12846) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent, in pursuance of the notice I gave the other day, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the Army bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That request I suppose applies to the morning hour?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. I say I suppose the request applies to the morning hour?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate the bill, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments to the substitute of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call attention to the fact that ten pages, or nine and a half, the first pages of the bill, have black lines drawn across. The House dropped that practically, and the real bill for consideration begins in line 18, on page 10. I suggest that while it is being read it be subject to the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment and that the committee amendments first be acted upon. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator from Connecticut to desire that the committee amendments shall be acted upon today rather than that the amendments shall be discussed? We have not even had the report of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendments will be acted upon if the Senate so authorizes.

Mr. BACON. I ask the question with a view to the inquiry of the Chair whether there is any objection or not. If it is simply the purpose of the Senator that the bill shall be taken up in order that he may give us information with reference to the amendments, that is one thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senate to take the bill up for action.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if it is designed that we shall pass upon these amendments without even having seen the report of the committee, I shall certainly object. I had no objection to the proposition for the consideration of the bill, but I should want it understood that it was not with a view to acting upon the amendments before we have even had an opportunity to see the report.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is evident upon reading over the first pages that a large number of the amendments are purely verbal. It seems to me that to facilitate business those amendments should be acted upon as they are reached, and as to any amendments of consequence, if the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator desires to have action postponed upon them it can be done, and they can be taken up at the convenience of the Senate at a subsequent time. But the formal amendments, it seems to me, could be easily disposed of as the bill is being read.

Mr. HALE. As I look at the bill, the whole bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs is an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. A House amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. A House amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The italics, indicate the action of the House. We take that as practically the bill, and what we strike out is indicated by heavy brackets.

Mr. HALE. Exactly. That is as I understand. The committee took the House bill and amended it. It comes as a House bill. The House amended the Senate bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House struck it all out.

Mr. HALE. The House struck it all out, sending a new bill to us, and that is the only thing the committee had before it. And now the committee reports to strike out the whole House bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. How then?

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee reports amendments to it.

Mr. LODGE. The committee propose to amend the House bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. We concur wherever we can and amend where we can not concur with the action of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is too much confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be considered as the text of the bill, so that we shall avoid parliamentary confusion.

Mr. HALE. That is it already. The committee so considered it. I want for my own guidance, not that I am opposing the bill, to understand the situation. In the first place, as the Senator in charge of the bill has said, all down to line 18 on page 10 is stricken out.

Mr. ALDRICH. By the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. By the House.

Mr. HALE. That is the House action on the Senate bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. On Senate bill 4300.

Mr. HALE. Now, what is it that the House sends to the Senate? What follows.

Mr. ALDRICH. In italics.

Mr. HALE. In italics, from line 18 to the end of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. An amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HALE. That is the entire bill, and the committee's amendments are the clauses in brackets, that are reached as we go along with the reading.

Mr. PROCTOR. In brackets and in roman type. The additions are in roman.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator, if he had time, had had the amendments numbered, as we do in such cases on appropriation bills. That would help us very much.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. The bill as it stands now is an amendment to our bill. It comes here as an amendment.

Mr. HALE. I so understand.

Mr. SEWELL. Our amendments are amendments to that bill; and we shall get into difficulty about the third stage of amendments unless my suggestion is adopted, that the amendment sent by the House shall be considered as the text of the bill, which it is not at the present time, notwithstanding some gentlemen here said the contrary. It can not do any harm, and I ask unanimous consent to have it so considered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we could not hear the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the House amendment for the purpose of amendment may be considered as the original text.

Mr. HALE. So that the Senate amendments will be the first amendments in order, and they can be amended.

Mr. SEWELL. They can be amended.

Mr. HALE. That rather facilitates the business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That probably would be so in any event under Jefferson's parliamentary law. Frequently, however, such requests have been made in the Senate. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I want to object, but I want to know a little more about this bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is it not in order to have the bill read in full?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I demand that it be read in full.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the Senator not to ask for the reading of the ten and one-half pages, of which not one word is to be in the permanent bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that the portion stricken out may be restored in conference as part of the bill. Therefore I ask that the whole of it may be read.

Mr. HOAR. May I be allowed to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs? I suppose the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the chairman of the committee, will indicate in a brief and compact statement, as all his statements are, what is the effect of this bill in important matters, to wit, how many changes it makes in the number of the Regular Army and what changes it makes in its organization. At what time in the proceeding does the Senator propose to make such a statement, if at all?

Mr. HAWLEY. Whenever the Senate is ready for it.

Mr. HOAR. I hope, Mr. President, the Senator will make that statement in the beginning. I think after it is made he will find it very easy to get such consent as will facilitate the business without depriving any Senator of an opportunity of saying what he has to say.

Mr. TELLER. What I am trying to get at is, What is the bill before the Senate? I have not been able thus far to find out. From the beginning of the bill everything is stricken out down to the end of line 17 on page 10. Then the bill commences with italics: "That from and after the approval of this bill the Army of the United States;" then we have in roman text, "including the existing organizations," and then there is more matter in italics. I can not understand from this print what the House has sent to us.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House has sent to us all that matter printed in italics.

Mr. TELLER. And what is that part not in italics?

Mr. HAWLEY. We put that in as an amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. That printed in roman text is the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendments of the committee are the parts printed in roman type and the parts inclosed in heavy brackets.

Mr. TELLER. Now I think I understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The words included between heavy brackets are stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] demands the reading of the bill. The bill will be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator mean the part which is crossed by heavy black lines? Does he want it all read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota require the reading of the original Senate bill, as well as the House amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand, that matter would be in conference if we should agree to the amendment striking it out, and therefore I desire to have the whole bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the original bill as passed by the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask some member of the Committee on Military Affairs to state how many men the bill as it passed the Senate added to the Army and in what branches of the service?

Mr. PROCTOR. The bill passed by the Senate last winter only added to the artillery. The amendment adopted by the House adds to the artillery the equivalent of 5 regiments. The addition is made in the form of a corps. The Senate changed that form and made it, correctly, 5 regiments; that is, made it 12 regiments instead of 7. The addition made by the House to the cavalry was 5 regiments, from 10 to 15, and to the infantry 5 regiments, from 25 to 30.

The bill provides, in round numbers, that the minimum of the Regular Army shall be about 58,000, and the maximum about 98,000. That is substantially correct.

Mr. TELLER. How will that maximum be determined?

Mr. PROCTOR. That maximum will be determined by the President, without any addition of officers. It merely provides for the addition of enlisted men when an emergency requires it. The organization will be 58,000, and the President may, by increasing the number of men in each company, increase the total in this proportion to 98,000.

Mr. TELLER. What number did the bill as it passed the Senate last year, in round numbers, add to the Army?

Mr. PROCTOR. As it passed the Senate last year the bill added the equivalent of 5 regiments, about 5,000 men, to the artillery.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill as it passed the Senate did not provide for a general reorganization of the Army.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was not a general reorganization.

Mr. TELLER. I discover that from reading the bill. The bill as it passed the Senate is a very different bill from the bill that comes from the House and as it now comes from the committee.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if the number of men proposed to be added to the artillery is still considered by the Senate committee as a sufficient number for that branch of the service?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is. That is the recommendation of the Department. It is substantially what was added last winter, when the matter of the artillery was very fully considered, and what the House has substantially incorporated in this substitute, if I may call it so. There has been no substantial difference in the action the Senate took last winter, the action that the House took recently, and the action of the Senate committee in reference to the number of the artillery. The Senate committee has changed the form from corps to regimental.

Mr. BATE. Pardon me a moment. When we voted upon this bill in the Senate, before it went to the House, the artillery was in the form of a corps. We voted for it as a corps. This bill goes exactly in the teeth of what we did last year, and puts the artillery back into regimental form, instead of following what we had decided upon last year.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly the form has been changed, but there is no substantial change in the number of officers and men in the increase of the artillery.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say that the proposed authority to increase the number of the Army is to provide against an emergency. I want to ask the Senator in whose discretion that emergency is to be determined?

Mr. PROCTOR. In the discretion of the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. BACON. Is he to have the absolute discretion to determine whether or not the Army shall be 58,000 or 100,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. Aguinaldo will have something to say and will have some influence on that question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I asked the question in good faith, and not for the purpose of any such discussion as that which the Senator from Connecticut invites. If the occasion were proper for it, I might reply, but, as I understand, we are here engaged in a most serious business. The question of whether or not the standing army of the United States shall be 100,000 men, and the still more serious question whether or not it shall in the future be the recognized policy of this Government that the Executive, in his unlimited, uncontrolled, and unbridled discretion, shall have the power, the absolute power, to increase the standing army of the United States, without a word of authority from Congress, from 58,000 men to 100,000 men. I say, Mr. President, that is a serious question, and not one to be answered by such a reply as that injected by the Senator from Connecticut, which is unworthy of the occasion and unworthy of the gravity of the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me explain a little to the Senator. I intended to say nothing uncivil. I spoke in a jocular form.

Mr. BACON. Oh, I beg the Senator to understand that I did not take it as being uncivil. I took it to be decidedly inappropriate to the occasion.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, I will take my responsibility for that part of it. The Senator wanted to know what force would be required, and I said Aguinaldo would have something to say on that, meaning thereby that the conduct of the insurgents would determine as to the number of the Army, subject to the discretion of the President of the United States. This bill does just exactly what has been done by every President. In time of war—

> The President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

It then goes on with some details. The President can bring the Army up to about 98,000 or practically 100,000 men. I can show the Senator some figures if he cares to have them.

The bill as adopted by the Military Committee of the Senate and reported to the Senate December 20, 1900, provides as follows:

Lieutenant-General	1	Volunteer signal officers (with rank of lieutenant)†	20
Major-generals	6	Record and pension	2
Brigadier-generals	15
Adjutants-general	28		1,055
Inspectors-general	17	Deducting volunteer officers	220
Judge-advocates	12
Quartermasters	89	Making total number of general and staff officers in permanent establishment	835
Commissaries	44
Medical officers	321	Total line officers	2,922
Volunteer medical officers (50 majors, 150 captains)*	200
Paymasters	44	Grand total officers permanent establishment	3,757
Engineers	160
Ordnance	72
Signal officers	24

*The commissions of 200 volunteer surgeons, authorized for service in the Philippine Islands, will expire in two years.

†The commissions of volunteer signal officers, for duty in the Philippine Islands, will expire July 1, 1902.

For the enlisted force of the Army.	Minimum.	Maximum.
15 regiments of cavalry, 815 each	12,225	18,525
12 regiments artillery, 1,156 each	13,872	20,592
30 regiments of infantry, 816 each	24,480	55,080
3 battalions engineers and band	1,234	2,002
Miscellaneous organizations, including guards for arsenals, Westpoint detachment, noncommissioned staff officers, etc.	2,245	2,245
Grand total	54,056	98,444

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to unduly interrupt the Senator, but I understood that he began to read in response to an inquiry which I had made. I presume I was mistaken, and that the Senator is proceeding to read the report at large.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I thought the Senator asked how large the increase would be.

Mr. BACON. No; the question I asked was this—I understood the reply to the inquiry which the Senator just now suggested as having been made by me: The point to which I directed the inquiry which I took the liberty of making of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] was as to the circumstances under which the emergency would be considered to have arisen which would authorize the President to raise the Army from 58,000, or about that number, to ninety-eight or one hundred thousand, and in whose discretion it was to determine when that emergency had arisen. The Senator from Vermont replied that it was in the discretion of the President of the United States, that he was to so determine; and at that point the Senator from Connecticut made his interjection, which led to the colloquy which has taken place.

Mr. President, this is probably not the time to discuss that matter, and I certainly should not have raised the question, but, as the Senator from Vermont had undertaken to make a statement as to that provision of the bill, I thought it was proper that the statement should be made complete, so that when the Senator stated that the power to increase the Army was to provide against an emergency I thought it was very proper that right in that connection there should be a statement as to how the existence of that emergency should be determined and who should determine it, and the Senator from Vermont very promptly replied, without any qualification or the suggestion of any collateral consideration, that it was in the power of the President of the United States.

While I do not desire to continue the discussion on this line, I think, in order that this matter may be presented in proper connection and consequence, that the Senator from Connecticut now on the floor [Mr. HAWLEY] or the Senator form Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], either of whom I presume can answer the question, should inform the Senate, when Congress meets every year and is in session more than half the time, why it is that the bill should take such a radical departure, and put within the absolute power of the President of the United States the right to determine whether the Army shall be 58,000 or whether it shall be 100,000. Congress is not only in regular session a large part of the time, but it is so easily within the power of the President of the United States to call it in session, if an emergency should require it. Why, then, is it that the power to determine what shall be the Army of the United States should be taken away from Congress and vested in the exclusive power—the absolute, unbridled power—of the Executive? What is the reason for it? I am asking the Senators, will they tell us what is the reason for it?

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall read section 26 of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. On what page?

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 37.

Mr. BACON. We are very anxious to hear what the Senator says, and he speaks a little low.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator propose to read from the Senate amendments or the House bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. The number of section 32 in brackets is stricken out, and it is now section 26, on page 37. The numbers of the sections in brackets are stricken out and the sections are renumbered. That is all. But I was going to read briefly——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator now refers to the newly numbered section 26.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; the newly numbered section 26. It provides:

> That the President is authorized—

Who authorizes him?

Mr. BACON. On what page is that?

Mr. HAWLEY. Page 37; the lower four lines on the page. Does the Senator find it?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. It says:

> That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. SPOONER. Should it not read "until such time as Congress may hereafter otherwise direct?" Is there not a word omitted?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know. There would be no harm in putting in the word "otherwise," but it says "until such time as Congress may hereafter direct."

Mr. TILLMAN. That means permanently; in other words, we abdicate our power of fixing the force, and leave it to all future Presidents until there is an act of Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. Unless you are going to keep Congress in session continuously, you have to leave somebody on guard while you go home; and while the Constitution perhaps is not so wise as we would make it, it puts the power in the hands of the President to say what shall be the minimum and maximum strength.

Mr. BATE. I wish to disagree with my friend there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BATE. I think the Constitution puts it in the hands not of the President, but of Congress. I beg to differ with the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. We can not in one sense put it in the hands of Congress, because the Constitution is ahead of us in that respect. It is in the hands of Congress.

Mr. BATE. And we can not take it out.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand this provision, having read it hastily, the pending bill fixes the maximum strength of the Army during the present exigency, whatever that may be.

Mr. HAWLEY. Quite true.

Mr. ALLISON. But it leaves open hereafter to the discretion of Congress the number of men that may be enlisted within the limits of the maximum and minimum strength.

The strength of the Army or the number of the Army must be decided from year to year, as I understand, by appropriations made by Congress. Suppose we appropriate this year, as we undoubtedly will, for the maximum strength of 100,000 men, and that next year, in the judgment of Congress, 80,000 or 75,000 men are sufficient, and we appropriate for only 75,000 men. Is it to be supposed that this discretion and power of Congress will be taken away by the provisions of the pending bill, or is it not dependent upon appropriations made from year to year as to the number of men that shall be paid and provided for from the appropriation bill?

Mr. BATE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question? Is it proposed here now by your committee to advise the Senate to make a full appropriation for 100,000 men, or only for the 58,000? You must have the money to pay them. Are you going to make an appropriation now for a hundred thousand men or for a less number? Are you going to anticipate the action of the President of the United States, as was the case last year, when he called out all the men he had the authority to call out, and they were paid?

Mr. ALLISON. Last year we made an appropriation for 100,000 men; but suppose under this provision Congress, in its discretion and judgment, believes that a hundred thousand men are not necessary, can it not, under the provisions of this bill, in appropriating for the pay and the support of the Army limit it to 80,000 or 75,000 men? The enlistment is for three years, and one-third of the Army goes out every year, so that there will be no difficulty in adjusting the number of men from year to year.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if his argument would not go to the extent of relieving Congress of the necessity at any time of prescribing the number of soldiers that ought to be in the Army, upon the ground that if the discretion were invested in the President, without limit as to the size of the Army, his discretion, if abused, could always be controlled by the power of Congress in withholding the appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. No, Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. So that it is not limited, as the Senator indicated by the question as to the minimum and the maximum, but if the principle which he seeks to invoke is correct, it would apply to the entire constitution of the Army, on the ground that if the President should call for more men than Congress thought were required, that act on his part could be controlled by the simple refusal of Congress to appropriate for more men than Congress thought were proper. If that is correct, then the framers of the Constitution were in error when they put within the lawmaking power the determination of the question what should be the number of the Army, and they ought to have put it in the power of the Executive, simply putting it in the power of the legislative branch to control the exercise of that discretion by the withholding of appropriations in case it should be supposed that the Executive was calling for more men or enlisting more men than were required.

Mr. ALLISON. No, Mr. President, my suggestion does not involve that idea at all. We must have an Army composed of officers and men, and a staff, if you please, either detailed or provided for specifically. Take the present Army. Turn to the Revised Statutes, and you will see that our statutory Army before the war with Spain was 30,000 men; and yet for years and years we provided in each appropriation bill for 25,000 men, including hospital stewards, etc.; in other words, 5,000 less men than the statute required. As I understand this bill, it provides for the machinery of companies, regiments, corps, etc., with a minimum enlistment of 58,000 men—if that is the number—and it also provides that those companies and regiments may be increased in times of emergency to 100,000 men.

Mr. BACON. By the act of the President.

Mr. ALLISON. So the bill simply provides the machinery for an Army with respect to the number of enlisted men, the minimum of which shall be 58,000 and the maximum 100,000. That is always, and must be in the nature of things, within the control of Congress from year to year by appropriations made. Thus, as I view this section, there is no difficulty about it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I call attention to the fact that under the Army reorganization act of 1868, 30,000 men were fixed as the standard of the Regular Army of the United States. Until about 1874 that continued to be the law, and yet Congress did not at any time appropriate for 30,000 men, and finally, about 1874, it fixed the limit at 25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Not the statutory limit, a limit simply of appropriation, which was that the men enlisted and paid for under the appropriation bill should be 25,000. It often amounted to 20,000 only.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is not an appropriation bill a statute? Are not our statute books filled with laws ingrafted on appropriation bills, and do not they remain the law until they are superseded by other legislation?

Mr. CARTER. An appropriation bill is temporary.

Mr. TILLMAN. An appropriation bill is temporary, but any general legislation on it becomes the law and remains the law until it is repealed by subsequent legislation, on an appropriation bill or otherwise.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, of course, as the Senator does, that an appropriation bill when it becomes a law is a statute. I did not need to be informed upon that subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was not trying to inform the Senator of anything. I was merely answering his contention.

Mr. ALLISON. What I mean to say is, that in each appropriation bill after the year 1875, as suggested by the Senator from Montana, we appropriated for 25,000 men. We did not make it a permanent statute. It was only for that year, and the next year we could have made it 27,000, or any other number under 30,000.

Mr. BACON. Whose discretion was exercised there—the discretion of the President or the discretion of Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY. The discretion of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly the discretion of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose in that appropriation bill we had made no limit of 25,000 men; the President, then, under the general statute, could have enlisted up to 30,000.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore in the appropriation bill we limited the number——

Mr. BACON. Exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. As we have been doing all the time.

Mr. BACON. But in this instance the discretion to be exercised is exclusively that of the Executive.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not at all understand the proposition of the committee as the Senator from Georgia understands it.

Mr. BACON. I hope I am wrong.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me the Senator must be wrong. We have now an Army of 100,000 men.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me, that he may understand me correctly? I want to set myself right. I wish to state that if I am wrong my error is based upon the information furnished by the Senator from Vermont. I was only acting upon what he stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state my understanding of it. We have now in round numbers an Army of 100,000 men engaged in the Philippines and elsewhere. This bill proposes to fix a maximum limit or number for our Army of a hundred thousand. Congress fixes it, not the President or anybody else; but in view of the fact that we all hope that a less number of men may be necessary, owing to the change in conditions in the Philippines and elsewhere in the near future, and that the Army therefore must be reduced and should be reduced from time to time, the President is given the opportunity, as Commander in Chief of the Army, to reduce it to 58,000 men whenever the conditions of the service are such that it can be reduced. Either the President or Congress can do it. It is not a question of increasing the Army. It is a question of reducing it whenever it can be done in the interest of the public service.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. I do not understand that there is any authority in this bill to the President to reduce the Army at all, except as he may call for men. He can not reduce it below 58,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. He can reduce the number of enlisted men at any time when he thinks the public service will permit it.

Mr. BATE. Not below 58,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; we fix a minimum.

Mr. BATE. You fix the legal minimum, and the President has no right to reduce it below the 58,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not below 58,000 until further action by Congress.

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to imply that the President, having reduced it, would not have the authority, in his discretion, thereafter to increase it? I understand the Senator to say he would have. That is the point.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the wording of the provision. It is not a continuing authority to the President. I read from the bottom of page 37:

> That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Rhode Island do not agree.

Mr. ALDRICH. We do.

Mr. PROCTOR. Perfectly.

Mr. BACON. I asked the Senator from Rhode Island whether, in his opinion, after the President had reduced the Army to 58,000, if an emergency arose which he thought justified it, he could thereafter increase it again.

Mr. HAWLEY. He would be obliged to.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Rhode Island said he could, and the Senator from Connecticut now bows his head in recognition of that as a correct statement. On the contrary, the Senator from Vermont says that he would not have the power; that it is not a continuing one, but that the power was exhausted when he once reduced it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. When we had an Army of 30,000 men authorized by law, and the Army actually was reduced by circumstances to 25,000, and an emergency arose on the Western plains or somewhere else, does the Senator mean that the President could not have enlisted enough additional men within the limit authorized by law?

Mr. BACON. That was not a matter put within the discretion of the President. The number was fixed at 30,000, and the only limitation was that pointed out by the Senator from Iowa, where Congress failed to make an appropriation for a greater number than that stated.

Mr. SPOONER. Was not that a maximum limit?

Mr. BACON. Yes; but there was no provision of law—there was no contemplation in law—that the President of the United States should be vested with the power which the Constitution intended Congress should exercise, to determine what shall be the size of the Army of the United States. There is no part of the Constitution of the United States in which the power of the Executive is more carefully guarded than in that part with reference to the exercise of any discretion by him or any undue power by him with respect to an army. Even Congress itself is prohibited from putting the Executive in possession of funds which will enable him to keep an army for a longer period than two years. It was because of the desire that the framers of the Constitution had that the one who wielded Executive power should not have unlimited power that all these provisions were put into the Constitution of the United States; and if that document is still entitled to any respect from us, it seems to me its spirit requires that the question what shall be the size of the Army should be determined by Congress and not by the Executive.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there can be no very serious controversy with reference to the constitutional limitations in this discussion, as there does not seem to be any disagreement here. In the first place, Congress does by this bill rigidly and absolutely fix the maximum limitation of the United States Army. It provides for certain flexibility in the number of enlisted men. The Senator from Georgia suggests that in doing this a conflict arises between the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Rhode Island in this. He contends that the Senator from Vermont says that when once reduced the Army can not be thereafter increased, or that the authority to increase it is not a continuing authority and not involved in the act. The Senator from Georgia, I think, misunderstands the Senator from Vermont in that behalf. This is the language:

> That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service.

I will concede that the construction contended for erroneously in behalf of the Senator from Vermont would be correct if the bill stopped there, but it does not. It proceeds to say, "or until such time as Congress may otherwise hereafter direct."

Mr. BACON. There is no "otherwise" there.

Mr. CARTER. That is a mere verbal omission. The word "otherwise" unquestionably should be inserted in the text.

Mr. BACON. That is all right.

Mr. CARTER. It is reasonably implied.

Mr. President, unquestionably, if the Army were reduced to 58,000 men, in view of the passing of present exigencies of the service, and thereafter it should appear to the President proper to enlist an additional number of men, and Congress should not otherwise in the meantime direct, the power is contained in the proposed law to make additional enlistments up to the maximum strength of the Army. That view must obtain or else the words "or until such time as Congress may otherwise hereafter direct" are meaningless and have no place at all in the proposed law.

Mr. ALLISON. There is nothing in this measure, as I understand it, different from what has frequently been done in statutes heretofore. In the law we passed two years ago, whereby we increased the Army temporarily to 65,000 men, we also authorized the President, in his discretion, to enlist 35,000 more. He could have enlisted 10,000 or 5,000 instead of 30,000, but he deemed it, in the exercise of his discretion, a wise thing to enlist nearly all of the 30,000, which I believe he did.

Mr. CARTER. As a matter of fact, at different times during the intervening periods the number has decreased far below 100,000, and occasionally has reached very near to the maximum limit. We occasionally have had 3,000 men short, sometimes, I believe, 5,000, and then again the number would be increased until only about a thousand short of the maximum limit happened to be the Army at the time.

This matter of flexibility is an absolute necessity in connection with the operations of an army. Enlistments vary from time to time as conditions change, and to undertake to fix, by Congressional enactment, an absolutely inflexible and unvarying number of troops for the Army is, in the practical affairs of the country, absolutely impossible. Congress discharges its full functions when fixing the maximum number. In this case it fixes a minimum number as well, exercising its judgment to the effect that the condition of the country is such that less than 58,000 men can not be safely depended upon for an ordinary police force.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield.

Mr. SEWELL. I beg pardon of the Senator from Connecticut. I forgot that he had the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is quite right. My colleague on the committee knows that.

Mr. SEWELL. When we were framing the bill last year, I think it was, in order to put a sufficient number of troops in the field we were obliged to give way to the section which required them to be mustered out on June 30 of this year. I wish to say that if it had been left to the Executive we would probably have saved in the service of these men and in their transportation $40,000,000, because we can not get a regiment to the Philippines and bring them back under a certain amount of money. That amendment, which was forced on the Military Affairs Committee at that time, has cost the country at least $40,000,000.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Connecticut pardon me for just a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I recognize the courtesy of the Senator, and I will not intrude upon him further. I think possibly an apology is due him. I had no idea of precipitating a debate when I asked the question of the Senator from Vermont. I simply wanted to have the information in connection with what he had previously stated. I wish to say this in reply to what the Senator from Montana has stated. I think the Senator from Iowa also had something to say on the same subject.

There is no parallel between the law which was passed in view of the Spanish-American war and the present proposed law. That was a law passed for the emergency of a war then upon us, to be in force only during that war, with the intention that it should immediately cease to be the law upon the termination of that war. But this does not propose to be an emergency bill. It proposes to be a bill which shall constitute the Regular Army of the United States.

If what the Senator from Vermont said, or what I understood him to say, is the proper construction of the bill, the feature which so much excites my opposition would not present to me the enormity which to my mind it does present. Of course I say that with all due respect to those who entertain a different opinion. If it were true, as stated by the Senator from Vermont, or as I understood him to state, that while the maximum is fixed at a hundred thousand it is not a continuing power vested in the President, and that the only power conferred upon him is a power to reduce, then I should have nothing to say about that feature. But I asked the question whether or not, after having reduced it, he could at any time, so long as this law stayed upon the statute book, increase the Army from 58,000 to a hundred thousand, and the Senator from Rhode Island said he could, and the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, says he could.

I understand the Senator from Montana to say he could. So that, so far from it being, as in the case of the bill providing for the emergency of the Spanish-American war, a bill limited to a certain specific occasion and for a specific purpose, to end when that occasion ceased to demand it, it is now proposed to put upon the statute book a law which shall be there for all time, until there shall be a Congress which shall have the power and the inclination to repeal it or to modify it. Therefore, if the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Connecticut are correct, for all time it becomes a fixed policy of the Government, the fixed law of the Government, that it shall be within the power of the President to determine whether the Army shall be 58,000 or whether it shall be a hundred thousand, and there is no limit to his discretion and no check upon his discretion.

Mr. LINDSAY. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me? What difference is there in principle between Congress abdicating to the President the right to reduce the Army to a minimum and the power to increase it to a maximum? I understand the Senator to say that he would not object if the President were authorized to reduce it; that what he does object to is that Congress authorizes him to increase it. I should like him to explain the difference in principle between the President exercising the Congressional function of reducing the Army and his exercising the Congressional function of increasing it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator understood me to say I would have no objection to a feature of that kind in the bill, or even if I said it, I did not properly express myself. What I mean is that the fact of reduction would not be a matter to which I should object. I think, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, that it is the province of Congress to determine not only as to an increase, but as to a decrease; but the question of increase is a very much more serious one than the question of decrease. I am opposed to an increase of the standing army beyond what may be absolutely necessary, because I am opposed to a large standing army. I think it threatens the institutions of this country. But an increase is a very much more serious matter in its effect, whether or not there is a difference in the principle.

But there is this to be said about it, in the practical feature of it, that if it were, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont, a power which is not a continuing power, while the principle might be violated, the great danger and the great evil to which we are opposed would be minimized, because, so far from the evil being increased, it would be one which would be diminished, and after having once been diminished it could not be again brought to confront us. But if the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Montana are correct, two of whom are members of the Committee on Military Affairs, then it is a most serious matter, not that there shall be for one time or for one year, but for all times, the power in the Executive to determine whether the Army shall be 58,000 or whether it shall be 100,000—to be determined in his discretion, without any check or without any power or control or influence by anybody else.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Connecticut will consent I will. I am on the floor by his courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think I have any rights here.

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN (to Mr. BACON). You have the floor.

Mr. BACON. I will not again trespass upon the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ALDRICH. May I ask the Senator a question? Does the Senator from Georgia seriously contend, supposing the Army was fixed at 30,000 under the old law, and that by reason of some misfortune in battle or otherwise it was decimated to one-half that number, and an emergency arose where it was necessary to use the full strength of the Army, that the President of the United States would have to consult Congress?

Mr. BACON. By no means.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the same case.

Mr. BACON. No, it is not.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the same case that he is now discussing.

Mr. CARTER. With the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to state that the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, that this proposed legislation embodies a departure in principle from the legislation which is now the statute law of the country on this subject, is open to question. The Senator suggests that the legislation to which this is not parallel provided for the raising of an army of volunteers to fight the Spanish war, an emergency in the country's history having arisen. Now, at the time the existing statute was passed the Spanish war had ceased.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon, I alluded to the act of 1898.

Mr. CARTER. I will get to that. I think I understand the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I was not alluding to the law that we passed after the expiration of the Spanish war. I was illustrating by the act which we passed authorizing the President to call out troops to meet that necessity.

Mr. CARTER. Then the Senator from Georgia must concede that the present proposed legislation does not in principle or spirit differ from the existing law upon the question of the Army.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Georgia does not concede that. On the contrary, he distinctly disputes it.

Mr. CARTER. Then, upon what basis is the question?

Mr. BACON. Because in the one case it was limited to July 1, 1901.

Mr. CARTER. And in the other case it was limited to such time as Congress might otherwise direct.

Mr. BACON. Of course, but limited to 1901, anyhow.

Mr. CARTER. Congress in one case fixed a definite limit. In the other case Congress reserves the right at any time to fix any limit it may see fit, and until such limit shall have been fixed by Congress the law itself fixes a maximum and a minimum for the Army of the United States.

In 1898, after the treaty of peace had been signed at Paris, conditions were not dissimilar from conditions confronting us now. In order to meet the conditions then existing it was proposed that the Regular Army should consist of 65,000 men, or thereabouts, and that in addition to the 65,000 men of the Regular Army we should have 35,000 volunteers. The President was not required to call out a single volunteer; he was not required to keep the Army at 65,000, but if, in his opinion, the 35,000 volunteers were necessary to supplement the Regular Army, in that event the right was given to the President to call out the 35,000 volunteers or any number of volunteers less than 35,000 that in his judgment might be necessary.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator from Montana recognize no difference between the authority of the President to call out volunteers and the authority of the President to determine, until the law shall be otherwise changed, no limit being fixed, what shall be the size of the Regular Army?

Mr. CARTER. But a limit is fixed, Mr. President, at 100,000 men.

Mr. BACON. Suppose we fix it at a million and state that the President shall have it from 58,000 to 1,000,000, he would have all the discretion he wanted.

Mr. CARTER. Congress may do it, if Congress shall see fit. The number of men does not in any sense change the principle involved, no more than was the principle changed when the Army was fixed at 30,000 and allowed in the ordinary course of muster out to be reduced below the number of 30,000 men, the condition of the service not requiring any greater number. It has been 27,000 at one time, 25,000 at another, and I believe while the statute remained allowing 30,000 men to be enlisted our Army drifted down to the point of about 17,000 in numbers at one time.

Now, in this case we make a departure from the former statutes only in this, that the minimum is fixed. The maximum number of the Army has been a feature of our legislation from the beginning.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator pardon me just there?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator speaks of the discretion of the President as to our maximum limit, which was 30,000, was it not? Congress reduced it to 25,000 by limiting the appropriation. Congress makes a limit 30,000; then Congress itself limits the Regular Army to 25,000 by reducing the appropriation just as effectively as a change made by statute. So it was not the discretion of the President; it was the action of Congress.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the Senator from North Carolina, I will say that there never was a time when the President was absolutely required, irrespective of the public service, to maintain the Army at 30,000. He could permit the enlistments to drop down to 20,000 and the appropriations for the maintenance of 30,000 would thereupon lapse and go back into the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. That was not a matter of express discretion given to the President. It was one of those accidents of situation that Congress did not complain of and which could not be considered an infraction of the law. But here we are giving an express discretion.

The Senator frequently referred to section 26 as limiting the discretion of the President, and as limiting the terms of this bill. He says that the language, "until Congress may otherwise hereafter direct," limits the provision. Instead of limiting it, I should like to ask the Senator if it does not make it a perpetual provision, because the wording as now arranged means the same as if it read—and stopped right there. The remaining words simply state until the present exigency shall cease or until Congress shall otherwise direct. We passed the gold-standard act. Is that perpetual? Can not Congress repeal it? Does it affect it at all that we state in the act that the act shall stand until Congress shall otherwise direct? That has no effect at all. The only effect it has in this case is to make it a perpetual law, just like any other law is until Congress shall see fit to repeal it.

That the President is authorized to maintain the enlistment force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act.

We are to-day fixing a standing army. All of the other legislation referred to has been temporary. I take it that there will be no trouble now in making any temporary provision that the Administration asks for while the present exigencies exist; and if the committee and the majority here shall ask for a temporary provision without increasing the standing army, giving this discretion as we construe it, I take it this bill could be passed in an hour. It does seem that is all the Administration could want. If the interests of the country demand anything more, I should like to hear some Senator address himself to that and tell us what we need beyond a temporary army for the present emergency.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me to take the floor for a moment? I think I can help him out a little. On page 40, beginning in line 22, the bill says:

The total number of enlisted men in said native organizations shall not exceed 12,000, and the total enlisted force of the line of the Army, together with such native force, shall not exceed at any one time 100,000.

There is your limitation. Now I should like to read another citation:

SEC. 26. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Now, the President of the United States is not left there to be a usurper. Abraham Lincoln was a great usurper when the Senator from Georgia—he may have been there himself—fired upon Fort Sumter.

Mr. BACON. What is that the Senator said? I want to get it exactly.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was only jocularly spoken.

Mr. BACON. I know, but I want to hear the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. When they fired upon Fort Sumter——

Mr. BACON. When I did?

Mr. HAWLEY. Possibly the Senator might have been there. That is all I said.

Mr. BACON. No; in that exact place I was not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, no matter. Abraham Lincoln did not wait the short time that it would take, comparatively, to get a quorum of Congress together. He immediately issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 men. Thank God, I was the first man in my State to count myself in, and he got them all without any trouble, and could have continued getting them up to this time, statute or no statute, while the flag was in danger.

Mr. BATE. I beg leave to state——

Mr. SPOONER. There was a statute.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of course there were statutes already.

Mr. BATE. They were volunteers, not regulars, and they were not put in the Army permanently.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope that in the discussion of this bill we may limit ourselves, as far as possible, to conditions in which we are not in antagonism and where we may all be considered as representing a common interest.

I have no desire to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut as to the conditions of forty years ago, or to say anything concerning them. I think the time has come, possibly, when the statute of limitations, if it would not bar anything else, would bar a discussion of them in the Senate in the absence of any very strong provocation. I certainly would not myself be led into it unless the Senator insists upon it, and I do hope that in the discussion of this bill we may be recognized as all of us representing a common interest and all of us designing to accomplish a common end.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, may I ask a question? Where in this bill is the President given any power to reduce the number of enlisted men? I have been looking for it, and I do not find any power given to the President to reduce the number.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator to ask me the question?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am in an unfortunate position. I have been myself trying to get light from the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and in endeavoring to give me that light they contradict each other, and I do not know who is right and who is wrong.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no specific power here given to the President to reduce, is there?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is a maximum limit.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] says there is; the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says there is; the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] says there is; the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] says there is. The only difference is this: Senators on the other side of the Chamber differ among themselves as to what will be the status when it is once reduced—whether it must stay reduced or whether the President will have thereafter the power again to increase. The Senators differ on that point.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I speak a word? Even my colleague is mistaken, which is very seldom. The word "exigencies" implies that there is an uncertain condition of things. There may be a million men wanted and there may be 10,000 men wanted. The word "exigencies" answers my purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator from Connecticut by a reference to the proviso in section 3, well-nigh the bottom of page 12. This appears in the bill. The proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That the President in his discretion may increase the number of corporals in any troop of cavalry to 8 and the number of privates to 76; but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not at any time be exceeded.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That does not answer my question. That is not a power to reduce. That is a power to increase beyond the minimum.

Mr. CARTER. That is correct.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to say that the President had power given here to reduce.

Mr. SPOONER. Does he not?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where does he?

Mr. ALDRICH. He must have.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the Senator turn to section 26 and read it carefully:

That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

That is only an authorization. There is a maximum limit and a minimum limit, and it authorizes the President to maintain the force during an exigency. That certainly would carry a very clear implication that after the exigency had passed he was authorized to reduce it, would it not?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin? This debate has proceeded upon the theory that the only flexibility provided for is that to be found in section 26 as renumbered, at page 37. The flexibility that is provided for is one of the attractive features to me of this bill. I think the power can be safely lodged with the President to enlarge the Army within a fixed limitation, as this maximum provides, in cases of exigency. Now, it is found, when you come to examine the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio yield one moment, while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business? It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside and the discussion continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. HAWLEY. I expected that. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending Army bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to what is known as the Army bill, Senate bill 4300.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry, if you please. I want to know the effect of this motion. Will it displace the shipping bill?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. HAWLEY).

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to call attention, Mr. President, to the fact that flexibility is provided for by a number of provisions in the sense of lodging with the President power to increase the Army to a maximum at his discretion. On page 12, at the end of section 2, is one of the provisions to which I refer. That is the section in which it is provided what the cavalry organization shall be, and it provides among other things, that—

Each troop of cavalry shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 6 corporals, etc., and 43 privates.

Then there is a proviso added:

That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of corporals in any troop of cavalry to 8, and the number of privates to 76.

On page 16 is found the provision as to the organization of the artillery, and it is provided that in each company of foot artillery the number of privates shall be 52—that is the minimum—and in each battery of field artillery the number of privates shall be 51, and then is added a proviso empowering the President in his discretion to increase the number of privates in any company of foot artillery to 85 and in any battery of field artillery to 133.

Then at page 18, in the renumbered section 6, is found a provision as to the infantry organization and a provision that there shall be in each infantry company 48 privates, with power given to the President in the proviso added to increase that number to 127. A similar provision is found as to the Corps of Engineers on page 19. The number of privates of the first class shall be 38 and of the second class also 38 in each company, with power to the President to increase the number to 64 in each company.

In other words, Mr. President, not looking further than this, the bill provides for an Army of 58,000, and that is the minimum. There shall be the requisite number of men in each company prescribed in the bill, and the total is shown by computation to amount to 58,000 officers and men. Then the power is given to the President, at his discretion, to increase this number, as I have already pointed out, as found in these several provisions, with a limitation, however, that in no event shall the aggregate of the Army exceed a certain maximum limit of 100,000. So before you reach renumbered section 26, at page 37, this power is already conferred upon the President to increase the Army from the minimum to the maximum.

At page 37, in renumbered section 26, the authority given to the President is but a reaffirmation really of the authority already conferred upon him, having special reference to existing conditions, making it clear that he is now by Congress given authority to maintain the power at the maximum during these existing conditions, with power to Congress to fix another time shorter than the termination of these existing conditions, or beyond their termination, as the Congress may hereafter see fit to direct.

I call attention to that in order that it may be made perfectly plain that the bill provides for flexibility as to the size of the Army, and that that power is lodged with the President, and I say that is to me one of the very great merits of this bill, that we maintain now a minimum, that is required, but that it may be increased, if there is any emergency, by the President exercising the discretion which we confer upon him. I think it is perfectly safe to confer upon him that discretion. I think if he may increase, he may also reduce, because it is at the discretion of the President that he increases beyond the minimum.

Now, if trouble should suddenly arise, it is within the power of the President to increase the Army, subject to the condition that he does not exceed the maximum, sufficient to meet it, and if that emergency subsides, the President may reduce. It seems to me that would follow without any express provision to that effect.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question? Suppose the President on the alarm of an approaching war or threat of war increases this Army to 100,000 men. The alarm goes by. We are looking forward to a condition of peace for the next twenty years as far as we know anything about it. Can the President dismiss those 42,000 men from the Army, and if so, where does he get his authority?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under the general law.

Mr. HOAR. Can he do it under the general law without cause and before the soldiers' term of enlistment expires? That is what I want to know.

Mr. FORAKER. It may be that this may be made more explicit, but it seems to me that the power to increase within his discretion would carry with it the power, when the danger had passed away, to reduce. But if there is any doubt about it, it can be placed beyond doubt by providing that he shall undoubtedly have that power to reduce again. There is not any question—that is all I am trying to point out—but that the President is empowered to increase the minimum size of the Army to its maximum size whenever, in his discretion, he thinks it is necessary for the public welfare or the common defense, and I think that carries with it the power to reduce it when the emergency passes. But if there is any doubt——

Mr. CARTER. May I make a suggestion to the Senator at that point?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Inasmuch as one-third of the enlistments expire each year, there will not be any difficulty in Congress at any time in the reduction of the Army by a mere failure to reenlist.

Mr. HAWLEY rose.

Mr. FORAKER. I have said all I care to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I intended to read some remarks of Secretary Root before the committee. He said:

We do not any of us expect that for any considerable period an army of 100,000 men will be maintained, and for an army of 60,000 men the provisions you made are certainly sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading at line 18, page 10.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that at least these minor verbal amendments may be agreed to as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The word "acts."

Mr. PROCTOR. The first line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent——

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it would be better to let that go by.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendments not objected to may be acted upon when reached.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That from and after the approval of this bill the Army of the United States shall consist of 15 regiments of cavalry, a corps of artillery, 30 regiments of infantry, 1 Lieutenant-General, 6 major-generals, 15 brigadier-generals, an Adjutant-General's Department, an Inspector-General's Department, a Judge-Advocate-General's Department, a Quartermaster's Department, a Subsistence Department, a Medical Department, a Pay Department, an Engineer Corps, an Ordnance Department, a Signal Corps, the officers of the Record and Pension Office, the chaplains, the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, the professors, corps of cadets, the army-service detachment and band at the United States Military Academy, and such other officers and enlisted men as may hereinafter be provided for: Provided, That when a vacancy shall occur through death, retirement, or other separation from active service in the office of storekeeper, now provided for by law in the Quartermaster's Department and Ordnance Department, respectively, said office shall cease to exist.

SEC. 2. That each regiment of cavalry shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 15 captains, 15 first lieutenants, and 15 second lieutenants; 2 veterinarians, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 commissary-sergeant, 3 squadron sergeants-major, 1 color-sergeant with rank, pay, and allowances of squadron sergeant-major, 1 band, and 12 troops organized into 3 squadrons of 4 troops each. Of the officers herein provided 3 captains shall be available for detail as adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary, and 3 first lieutenants shall be available for detail as squadron adjutants, and 3 second lieutenants shall be available for duty as squadron quartermasters and commissaries. Squadron adjutants shall receive $1,800 per annum and the allowances of first lieutenants; squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall receive $1,600 per annum and the allowances of second lieutenants. Each cavalry band shall be organized as now provided by law. Each troop of cavalry shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 6 corporals, 2 cooks, 2 farriers and blacksmiths, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, 2 trumpeters, and 43 privates; the commissioned officers to be assigned from among those hereinbefore authorized: Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of corporals in any troop of cavalry to 8, and the number of privates to 76, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not at any time be exceeded.

SEC. 3. That the regimental organization of the artillery arm of the United States Army is hereby discontinued, and that arm is constituted and designated as the Artillery Corps. It shall be organized as hereinafter specified and shall belong to the line of the Army.

SEC. 4. That the Artillery Corps shall comprise two branches—the coast artillery and the field artillery. The coast artillery is defined as that portion charged with the care and use of the fixed and movable elements of land and coast fortifications, including the submarine mine and torpedo defenses; and the field artillery as that portion accompanying an army in the field, and including field and light artillery proper, horse artillery, siege artillery, mountain artillery, and also machine-gun batteries: Provided, That this shall not be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of War to order coast artillery to any duty which the public service demands or to prevent the use of machine or other field guns by any other arm of the service under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That all officers of artillery shall be placed on one list, in respect to promotion, according to seniority in their several grades, and shall be assigned to coast or to field artillery according to their special aptitude for the respective services.

SEC. 6. That the Artillery Corps shall consist of an Inspector of Artillery, who shall be selected and detailed by the President from the colonels of artillery, to serve on the staff of the general officer commanding the Army, and whose duties shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; 14 colonels, one of whom shall be the Inspector of the Artillery; 13 lieutenant-colonels, 39 majors, 182 captains, 198 first lieutenants, 192 second lieutenants; and the captains and lieutenants provided for in this section not required for duty with batteries or companies shall be available for duty as staff officers of the various artillery garrisons and such other details as may be authorized by law and regulations; 21 sergeants-major, with the rank, pay, and allowances of regimental sergeants-major of infantry; 27 sergeants major, with the rank, pay, and allowances of battalion sergeants-major of infantry; 1 electrician sergeant to each coast-artillery post having electrical appliances; 30 batteries of field artillery, 126 batteries of coast artillery, and 10 bands organized as now authorized by law for artillery regiments: Provided, That the aggregate number of enlisted men for the artillery, as provided under this act, shall not exceed 18,920, exclusive of electrician sergeants.

SEC. 7. That each company of coast artillery shall be organized as is now prescribed by law for a battery of artillery: Provided, That the enlisted strength of any company may be fixed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the requirements of the service to which it may be assigned: And provided, That first-class gunners shall receive $2 a month and second-class gunners $1 per month in addition to their pay.

SEC. 8. That each battery of field artillery shall be organized as is now prescribed by law, and the enlisted strength thereof shall be fixed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 9. That the increase herein provided for the artillery shall be made as follows: Not less than 20 per cent before July 1, 1901, and not less than 20 per cent each succeeding twelve months until the total number provided for in this bill shall have been attained. All vacancies created or caused by this act shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the artillery arm. Second lieutenants of infantry or cavalry may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred to the artillery arm, taking rank therein according to length of service as commissioned officers, and such transfers shall be subject to approval by a board of artillery officers appointed to pass upon the capacity of such officers for artillery service: Provided, That the increase of officers of artillery shall be only in proportion to the increase of men.

SEC. 10. That each regiment of infantry shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 15 captains, 15 first lieutenants, and 15 second lieutenants; 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 commissary-sergeant, 3 battalion sergeants-major, 2 color sergeants, with rank, pay, and allowances of battalion sergeants-major, 1 band, and 12 companies, organized into 3 battalions of 4 companies each. Of the officers herein provided, 3 captains shall be available for detail as adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary, and 3 first lieutenants shall be available for detail as battalion adjutants, and 3 second lieutenants shall be available for duty as battalion quartermasters and commissaries. Battalion adjutants shall receive $1,800 per annum and the allowances of first lieutenant, mounted; battalion quartermasters and commissaries shall receive $1,600 per annum and the allowances of second lieutenant, mounted. Each infantry band shall be organized as now provided by law. Each infantry company shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 4 sergeants, 6 corporals, 2 cooks, 2 musicians, 1 artificer, and 48 privates: Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of sergeants in any company of infantry to 6, the number of corporals to 10, and the number of privates to 127, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not, at any time, be exceeded.

SEC. 11. That the enlisted force of the Corps of Engineers shall consist of 1 band and 3 battalions of engineers. The engineers' band shall be organized as now provided by law for bands of infantry regiments. Each battalion of engineers shall consist of 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, and 4 companies. Each company of engineers shall consist of 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, with the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, 8 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 cooks, 38 first-class and 38 second-class privates: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, increase the number of sergeants in any company of engineers to 12, the number of corporals to 18, the number of first-class privates to 64, and the number of second-class privates to 64, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not, at any time, be exceeded.

SEC. 12. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army, at the rate of 1 for each regiment of cavalry and infantry in the United States service and 12 for the corps of artillery, with the rank, pay, and allowances of captains of infantry: Provided, That no person shall be appointed a chaplain in the Regular Army who shall have passed the age of 35 years, nor until he shall have established his fitness as required by existing law: And provided, That the office of post chaplain is abolished, and the officers now holding commissions as chaplains, or who may hereafter be appointed chaplains, shall be assigned to regiments or to the corps of artillery. Chaplains may be assigned to such stations as the Secretary of War shall direct, and they may be transferred, as chaplains, from one branch of the service or from one regiment to another by the Secretary of War, without further commission. When serving in the field, chaplains shall be furnished with necessary means of transportation by the Quartermaster's Department.

SEC. 13. That the Adjutant-General's Department shall consist of 1 Adjutant-General with the rank of major-general during the active service of the present incumbent of the office and with the rank of brigadier-general thereafter, 5 assistant adjutants-general with the rank of colonel, 7 assistant adjutants-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 15 assistant adjutants-general with the rank of major: Provided, That all vacancies created or caused by this section shall, as far as possible, be filled by promotion according to seniority of officers of the Adjutant General's Department.

SEC. 14. That the Inspector-General's Department shall consist of 1 Inspector-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 3 inspectors with the rank of colonel, 4 inspectors with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 9 inspectors with the rank of major: Provided, That all vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled, as far as possible, by promotion according to seniority of officers of the Inspector-General's Department.

SEC. 15. That the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall consist of 1 Judge-Advocate-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 2 judge-advocates with the rank of colonel, 3 judge-advocates with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 6 judge-advocates with the rank of major, and for each geographical department or tactical division of troops not provided with a judge-advocate from the list of officers holding permanent commissions in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department 1 judge-advocate with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, mounted. Promotions to vacancies above the grade of major, created or caused by this act, shall be made, according to the rules of seniority, from officers now holding commission in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department. Vacancies created or caused by this act in the grade of major may be filled by appointment of officers holding commissions as judge-advocate of volunteers since April 21, 1898. Vacancies which may occur hereafter in the grade of major in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by selection of officers of the line.

Vacancies in the grade of captain in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army officers of the grade of captain or first lieutenant, and while so serving shall continue to hold their commissions in the arm of the service to which they permanently belong. Upon completion of a tour of duty not exceeding four years they shall be returned to the arm in which commissioned, and shall not be again detailed until they shall have completed two years' duty with the arm of the service in which commissioned.

SEC. 16. That the Quartermaster's Department shall consist of 1 Quartermaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 7 quartermasters with the rank of colonel, 11 quartermasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 28 quartermasters with the rank of major, 72 quartermasters with the rank of captain, mounted; the military storekeeper now provided for by law, and 150 post quartermaster-sergeants: Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain created by this act in the Quartermaster's Department the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898.

SEC. 17. That the Subsistence Department shall consist of 1 Commissary-General with the rank of brigadier general, 3 commissaries with the rank of colonel, 4 commissaries with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 9 commissaries with the rank of major, 27 commissaries with the rank of captain, mounted, and 150 commissary-sergeants who shall hereafter be known as post commissary-sergeants: Provided, That all vacancies in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major, created or caused by this section, shall be filled by promotion, according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain, created by this act, in the Subsistence Department, the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898.

SEC. 18. That the Medical Department shall consist of 1 Surgeon-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 8 surgeons with the rank of colonel, 12 surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 60 surgeons with the rank of major, 240 assistant surgeons with the rank of captain or first lieutenant, the Hospital Corps, as now authorized by law, and the Nurse Corps: Provided, That all vacancies in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, subject to the examination now prescribed by law: And provided, That the period during which any assistant surgeon shall have served as a surgeon or assistant surgeon in the Volunteer Army during the war with Spain or since shall be counted as a portion of the five years' service required to entitle him to rank of captain: And provided also, That nothing in this section shall change the relative rank for subsequent promotion of medical officers as arranged by results of competitive examination: Provided further, That in emergencies the Surgeon-General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, may appoint as many contract surgeons as may be necessary, at a compensation not to exceed $150 per month.

That on or after the passage of this act the President may appoint for duty in the Philippine Islands 50 surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of major, and 150 assistant surgeons of volunteers with the rank and pay of captain, for a period of two years: Provided, That so many of these volunteer medical officers as are not required shall be honorably discharged the service whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War their services are no longer necessary: Provided, That the Surgeon-General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ dental surgeons to serve the officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer Army, in the proportion of not to exceed 1 for every 1,000 of said Army, and not exceeding 30 in all. Said dental surgeons shall be employed as contract dental surgeons under the terms and conditions applicable to Army contract surgeons, and shall be graduates of standard medical or dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry, of good moral and professional character, and shall pass a satisfactory professional examination: Provided, That 3 of the number of dental surgeons to be employed shall be first appointed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of War, with reference to their fitness for assignment, under the direction of the Surgeon-General, to the special service of conducting the examinations and supervising the operations of the others; and for such special service an extra compensation of $60 a month will be allowed: Provided further, That dental college graduates now employed in the Hospital Corps who have been detailed for a period of not less than twelve months to render dental service to the Army and who are shown by the reports of their superior officers to have rendered such service satisfactorily may be appointed contract dental surgeons without examination.

SEC. 19. That the Nurse Corps (female) shall consist of one Superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, and whose term of office may be terminated at his discretion, whose compensation shall be $1,800 per annum, and of as many chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses as may be needed. Reserve nurses may be assigned to active duty when the emergency of the service demands, but shall receive no compensation except when on such duty: Provided, That all nurses in the Nurse Corps shall be appointed or removed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of War; that they shall be graduates of hospital training schools, and shall have passed a satisfactory professional, moral, mental, and physical examination: And provided, That the Superintendent and nurses shall receive transportation and necessary expenses when traveling under orders; that the pay and allowances of nurses, and of reserve nurses, when on active service, shall be $40 per month when on duty in the United States and $50 per month when without the limits of the United States. They shall be entitled to quarters, subsistence, and medical attendance during illness, and they may be granted leaves of absence for thirty days, with pay, for each calendar year; and, when serving as chief nurses, their pay may be increased by authority of the Secretary of War, such increase not to exceed $25 per month. Payments to the Nurse Corps shall be made by the Pay Department.

SEC. 20. That the Veterinary Corps shall consist of—

A Chief Veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, United States Army.

An assistant chief veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, United States Army, to be promoted in 1905, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of veterinarian and captain.

Four veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain of cavalry, to be promoted in 1903, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and first lieutenant.

Ten assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry, to be promoted, after satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and second lieutenant after one year's service in this grade.

Twenty assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry, to be appointed after satisfactory examination: Provided, That these 20 positions shall include the veterinarians, first class, provided for in the act of March 2, 1899, who have passed satisfactory examinations, and also the 6 veterinarians, second class, who are now employed in the Army under said act of March 2, 1899.

All rules and regulations governing the Veterinary Corps shall be made by the Secretary of War, and the chief veterinarian shall report directly to that officer.

For pay of officers of the Veterinary Corps, $33,500.

SEC. 21. That the Pay Department shall consist of 1 Paymaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 4 paymasters with the rank of colonel and assistant paymaster-general, 5 paymasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel and deputy paymaster-general, 20 paymasters with the rank of major, and 25 paymasters with the rank of captain: Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel and lieutenant-colonel created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law, and no more appointments to the grade of major and paymaster shall be made until the number of majors and paymasters is reduced below 20: And provided, That persons who have served in the Volunteer Army since April 21, 1898, as additional paymasters may be appointed to positions in the grade of captain, created by this section. So long as there remain surplus majors an equal number of vacancies shall be held in the grade of captain, so that the total number of paymasters authorized by this section shall not be exceeded at any time.

SEC. 22. That the Corps of Engineers shall consist of 1 Chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier-general, 7 colonels, 14 lieutenant-colonels, 23 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 30 second lieutenants. The enlisted force provided in section 11 of this act and the officers serving therewith shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided, That Chief of Engineers shall be selected as now provided by law, and hereafter vacancies in the Corps of Engineers in all other grades above that of second lieutenant shall be filled, as far as possible, by promotion according to seniority from the Corps of Engineers: And provided also, That vacancies remaining in the grades of first and second lieutenant may be filled by transfer of officers of the Regular Army, subject to such professional examination as may be approved by the Secretary of War. Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant not filled by transfer shall be left for future promotions from the corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

SEC. 23. That the Ordnance Department shall consist of 1 Chief of Ordnance with the rank of brigadier-general, 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant-colonels, 12 majors, 24 captains, and 24 first lieutenants, the ordnance storekeeper, and the enlisted men, including ordnance sergeants, as now authorized by law. All vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion and appointment, as now prescribed by law.

SEC. 24. That the Signal Corps shall consist of 1 Chief Signal Officer with the rank of brigadier-general, 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 5 majors, 19 captains, 19 first lieutenants, 80 first-class sergeants, 120 sergeants, 150 corporals, 200 first-class privates, 150 second-class privates, and 10 cooks: Provided, That vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion of officers of the Signal Corps according to seniority, as now provided by law. Vacancies remaining after such promotions may be filled by appointment of persons who have served in the Volunteer Signal Corps since April 21, 1898.

SEC. 25. That the officers of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department shall be a chief of said office with the rank of brigadier-general and an assistant chief of said office with the rank of major: Provided, That any person appointed to be Chief of the Record and Pension Office after the passage of this act shall have the rank of colonel.

SEC. 26. That so long as there remain any officers holding permanent appointments in the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, the Pay Department, the Ordnance Department, and the Signal Corps, they shall be promoted according to seniority in the several grades, as now provided by law, and nothing herein contained shall be deemed to apply to vacancies which can be filled by such promotions.

SEC. 27. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled by promotion or appointment under the provisions of preceding sections of this act, in offices of the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments; of captain in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay departments, and of first lieutenant in the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall not be filled by a permanent appointment, but shall be filled by the detail, by the Secretary of War after competitive examination, as hereinafter provided, of an officer of the line, who shall serve for the period of four years unless sooner relieved, and shall not again be eligible for detail in any staff corps or department until he shall have rendered actual service for two years with troops of the arm in which he is commissioned. Any officer detailed for staff duty under the provisions of this section shall be selected from the grade corresponding to, or from the grade next below, that to which the detail is to be made, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade to which detailed. No detail for staff duty as herein provided shall be made in the case of any officer until he has actually served with troops for at least four years if his rank is above that of a second lieutenant, and for at least two years if he is a second lieutenant; and no such detail shall be made in the case of any officer until he shall have passed a satisfactory competitive examination by an examining board composed of three officers, of whom one may be a line officer and two shall be permanent or detailed officers of the department or corps in which the detail is to be made, said examination to be conducted under regulations to be prescribed by the President, and to be announced in general orders to the Army. Examining boards, to be constituted as herein prescribed, for the various departments and corps in which details are to be made shall be convened by the Secretary of War at such times and places as the exigencies of the service may require, and said boards shall examine and report upon, as far as practicable, all line officers who may be applicants for details to staff duty, and who shall have been recommended by their commanding officers for such details. A separate list of officers reported on favorably by such examining boards shall be kept for each department or corps in which details are to be made, the officers on said list to be arranged in accordance with the ratings given them by the examining boards, and to be detailed for duty, in the department or corps to which the list pertains, in the order of their standing upon said list, beginning with the officers having the highest rating; but no officer shall remain eligible for detail for more than two years unless he shall again successfully pass the examination hereinbefore prescribed.

SEC. 28. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled under the provisions of preceding sections of this act by the promotion of officers holding permanent appointments, in offices of the grades of colonel in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments, of major in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence departments, of major in the Pay Department after the number of paymasters of that grade shall have been reduced below 20, and of captain in the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of an officer to be selected from among those who have served by detail, under the provisions of this act, in the next lower grade in the department or corps in which the vacancy occurs.

SEC. 29. That each position vacated by officers of the line, transferred to any department of the staff for tours of service under this act, shall be filled by promotion in the line until the total number detailed equals the number authorized for duty in each staff department. Thereafter vacancies caused by details from the line to the staff shall be filled by officers returning from tours of staff duty. If under the operation of this act the number of officers returned to any particular arm of the service at any time exceeds the number authorized by law in any grade, promotions to that grade shall cease until the number has been reduced to that authorized.

SEC. 30. That vacancies in the grade of field officers and captain, created by this act, in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in each branch, respectively. Vacancies existing after the promotions have been made shall be provided for as follows: A sufficient number shall be reserved in the rank of second lieutenant for the next graduating class at the United States Military Academy. Officers now holding commissions in the Volunteer Army may be ordered before boards of officers for such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War. Volunteer officers who establish their fitness before these examining boards may be appointed to the grade of first or second lieutenant in the Regular Army. Volunteer officers so appointed to the grade of first or second lieutenant shall be arranged according to rank, on a separate list. All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants, according to seniority, as determined by length of prior commissioned service; but nothing herein contained shall change the relative rank of officers heretofore commissioned as second lieutenants in the Regular Army.

When the vacancies in the grade of first lieutenant shall have been filled from the two lists, the names of the remaining second lieutenants shall then be placed on one list in each branch, arranged as to seniority, according to the dates of their commissions, and promotions thereafter shall be made as provided for in existing law. That the present restrictions of law or regulations as to age shall not apply to those who have served as volunteers since April 21, 1898, so far as appointment to the grades of second or first lieutenant of the line are concerned.

SEC. 31. That to fill vacancies occurring from time to time in the several organizations serving without the limits of the United States with trained men, the President is authorized to enlist recruits in numbers equal to 4 per cent in excess of the total strength authorized for such organizations.

SEC. 32. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct: Provided, That in the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law, and after the expiration of one year of service, should either of his parents die, leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may be honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War.

SEC. 33. That the Secretary of War is authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruiting rendezvous, and while performing such duty one member of each party shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and one the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal of the arm of the service to which they respectively belong.

SEC. 34. That when the exigencies of the service of any officer who would be entitled to promotion upon examination require him to remain absent from any place where an examining board could be convened, the President is hereby authorized to promote such officer, subject to examination, and the examination shall take place as soon thereafter as practicable. If upon examination the officer be found disqualified for promotion, he shall, upon the approval of the proceedings by the Secretary of War, be treated in the same manner as if he had been examined prior to promotion.

SEC. 35. That when in the opinion of the President the interests of the service will be benefited thereby, he is empowered to place upon the retired list, by Executive order, any officer who has been suspended from duty, either by sentence of court-martial or by virtue of an Executive order in mitigation of such sentence, for a period extending to or within one year of the time of his compulsory retirement for age.

SEC. 36. That all officers who have served during the war with Spain, or since, as officers of the Regular or Volunteer Army of the United States, and have been honorably discharged or resigned from the service, shall be entitled to bear the official title and, upon occasions of ceremony, to wear the uniform of the highest grade they have held by brevet or other commission in the regular or volunteer service.

SEC. 37. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made for the purpose of selecting sites with a view to the establishment of permanent camp grounds for instruction of troops of the Regular Army and National Guard, one each for the North, South, East and West, to be fully equipped and fitted with all modern appliances, and for this purpose is authorized to detail such officers of the Army as may be necessary to carry on the preliminary work; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for the necessary expense of such work, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 38. That when in his opinion the conditions in the Philippine Islands justify such action the President is authorized to enlist natives of those islands for service in the Army, to be organized as scouts, with such officers as he shall deem necessary for their proper control, or as troops or companies, as authorized by this act, for the Regular Army. The President is further authorized, in his discretion, to form companies organized as are companies of the Regular Army, in squadrons or battalions, with officers and noncommissioned officers corresponding to similar organizations in the cavalry and infantry arms. The total number of enlisted men in said native organizations shall not exceed 12,000, and the total enlisted force of the line of the Army, together with such native force, shall not exceed at any one time 100,000.

The majors to command the squadrons and battalions shall be selected by the President from captains of the line of the Regular Army, and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade of major. The captains of the troops or companies shall be selected by the President from first lieutenants of the line of the Regular Army, and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain of the arm to which assigned. The squadron and battalion staff officers, first and second lieutenants of companies, shall be selected from the noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army of not less than two years' service, or from officers or noncommissioned officers serving, or who have served, in the volunteers during or since the war with Spain, and officers of those grades shall be given provisional appointments for periods of four years each, and no such appointments shall be continued for a second or subsequent term unless the officer's conduct shall have been satisfactory in every respect. The pay and allowances of provisional officers of native organizations shall be those authorized for officers of like grades in the Regular Army. The pay of the enlisted men shall be one-half that authorized for the Regular Army, and rations and clothing allowances to be authorized shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

When, in the opinion of the President, natives of the Philippine Islands shall, by their services and character, show fitness for command, the President is authorized to make provisional appointments to the grades of second and first lieutenants from such natives, who, when so appointed, shall have the pay and allowances to be fixed by the Secretary of War, not exceeding those of corresponding grades of the Regular Army.

SEC. 39. That the President is authorized to organize and maintain one provisional regiment of not exceeding three battalions of infantry, for service in Porto Rico, the enlisted strength thereof to be composed of natives of that island. The regiment shall be organized as to numbers, pay, and allowances as authorized for infantry regiments of the Regular Army. The field officers shall be selected from officers of the next lower grades in the Regular Army and shall, while so serving in the higher grade, have the rank, pay, and allowances thereof. The company and regimental and battalion staff officers shall be appointed by the President. The President may, in his discretion, continue with their own consent the volunteer officers and enlisted men of the Porto Rico regiment, whose terms of service expire by law July 1, 1901. Enlistments for the Porto Rico regiment shall be made for periods of three years, unless sooner discharged. The regiment shall be continued in service until further directed by Congress.

SEC. 40. The sale of, or dealing in, beer, wine, or any intoxicating liquors by any person in any post exchange or canteen or army transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States, is hereby prohibited. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

SEC. 41. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to discharge any officer from the Regular Army or to deprive him of the commission which he now holds therein.

During the reading of the amendment, when the Secretary reached line 8, on page 29, section 21,

Mr. PETTIGREW. I notice that the latter part of page 28, marked section 16, was skipped by the clerk in the reading. Is he reading only the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is reading the House amendment only.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I supposed he was reading the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the bill. Section 16 is a proposed amendment to the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On the part of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the part of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

The reading of the amendment having been concluded—

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask now, the Senate being willing, to go back to page 10 and begin acting upon the amendments. The bill has been read through.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on that. I think we are certainly entitled to see the report of the committee before we are called upon to vote on any part of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. It should be on the Senator's desk now.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to call for a print of it this morning.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I called for a reprint—an additional print.

Mr. BACON. I was misled by that and I did not know that the report is here. I thought that the Senator had just called for a print of the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a pamphlet also containing a very considerable body of evidence that we have heard. We have been compelled to yield graciously to a good many people the privilege of making arguments.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator when the report was furnished to the Senate?

Mr. PROCTOR. December 20.

Mr. BACON. I never saw it before. I have had no time whatever to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks for action upon an amendment which will be stated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. It is in line 19 on page 10. Does the Senator from South Dakota want the floor?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that some one in charge of the bill ought to state to the Senate and the country the reason for the existence of an Army of 100,000 men at this time. We are left entirely ignorant of all official knowledge that there is any war going on at present. No war has been declared by Congress, and if there is any necessity for an Army of 100,000 men it ought to be stated, and that necessity ought to be shown. Is there a war going on, or have we peace within our borders? It seems to me the facts and circumstances from an official source ought to be furnished before we proceed to enlarge the Army of the United States to the extent provided by the bill. I should like to know whether we are to have any information on this subject.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator who has just spoken that we have had as high as 79,000 men in the Philippines, and that they are divided into 420 posts.

Mr. HOAR. How many men?

Mr. SEWELL. We have had as high as 79,000. We have taken away some of them. We have probably 76,000 there now. If we are to hold the Philippines—and I think the majority of the Senate are in favor of doing it, under the circumstances—we shall have to have a large army there, not alone this year, but next year, and probably for several years to come, until it is pacified and until we have confidence enough in the people there to raise a provisional army or employ police there who will keep order. We are to-day in the situation of facing the exigency under the law passed last year, by which we have not alone to discharge the 35,000 volunteers who are there, but to reduce the Regular Army to 29,000 men.

It is perfectly apparent to anybody who will look into the situation that we have got to continue about the same number of men for some time to come. It may be for one or two years or three years, but it ought not to be limited. It ought to be left to a maximum and a minimum number, in the discretion of the President, to avoid the present condition of affairs, by which we send 35,000 men to the Philippines, taking six months to get there, and after six months' service requiring practically six months to get back. So the men who ought under ordinary circumstances, as we do in the Regular Army, to have three years' service abroad will not have any more than six months' active service.

Senators who do not look into the question of organizing and transporting troops have no idea what it costs. It is a tremendous tax on the country. Instead of enlisting men for three years, and letting them serve out their time, we muster these out in eighteen months, and we are to-day withdrawing from some of the posts in the Philippines men in order to start them home to comply with the law. If we do not give immediate relief, then many more men will have to be withdrawn, because transportation is a governing quantity in this case. It will take all the time from now until the 30th of June to get back those 35,000 men of the volunteers alone, and unless we have this law enacted we shall have to do the same with the regular troops, and practically abandon the posts. I trust that no Senator is desirous of abandoning the flag under fire.

Let me say to the Senator from South Dakota that there is a war going on, a very serious war. It is not in great shocks of battle, which may occur one day in a month, but the loss is equal to it, taking the aggregate in a month or three months. Our troops to-day are being denuded by losses which grow out of the little posts, where they are turned out as scouts and where they are ambushed, and all that kind of thing. The country has got to face the situation boldly as to whether we are to uphold our flag in the Philippines or not. If we are—and I take it that we shall—we certainly must provide the men with which to do it.

The Senator from Georgia will remember that when this matter was up for discussion a year ago I said, to the astonishment of everyone, that it would take fifty or sixty thousand men several years in the Philippines. Nobody believed it at that time, but it has turned out to be correct, and it will continue to be so.

The bill as proposed by the Secretary of War, which has been discussed very freely in the Military Committee, proposes a minimum of 54,056 men, to be included in 15 regiments of cavalry at 815 each, 12 regiments of artillery at 1,156 each, 30 regiments of infantry at 816 each, 3 battalions engineers and band, 1,234, and miscellaneous organizations, including guards for arsenals, West-point detachment, noncommissioned staff officers, etc., making a minimum of 54,056, to be increased at the discretion of the President up to 97,964 enlisted men.

The bill as proposed by the Military Committee on those lines, gives 1 Lieutenant-General, 6 major-generals, 15 brigadier-generals, 28 adjutants-general, 17 inspectors-general. All of these are slight increases, but not very much. It gives for the enlisted force of the Army a minimum of 54,056 men and a maximum of 98,444.

It seems to me that we ought to allow discretion in the matter to the President and not fix an arbitrary line, as we did last year, by which we have to bring these men back without the service that we intended they should perform.

It is always subject to an act of Congress, as a matter of course, and if he abuses the power and keeps men longer in the field than they ought to be kept, Congress can stop it at any time. But during the interim of Congress we ought not to have the Army denuded. We ought not to have the flag assaulted, as it will be. We ought to keep up our power and prestige in the Philippines. No matter how we got there, we are there, and we should remain there.

There are now in the service of the Regular Army, generals and staff officers, 544. The bill, as submitted by the Secretary of War, provided for 855 generals and staff officers. The increase proposed is to take the place of the volunteer staff and the general officers who will be discharged the 30th of June. The bill as it passed the House allowed 1,135. That is nearly 200 more than the number reported by the committee of the Senate.

The main question, though, raised by the Senator from South Dakota, is, Have we a war and do we need any increase in the Army? We are simply increasing the Army, or allowing the President to increase it, as a temporary measure to the extent of the absolute discharges that will have to be made under the present law. That is the situation. I think the Military Committee have given it very full consideration. They have reported a bill as low in numbers as they think will be satisfactory. They think that every man and every officer that they have reported will be required to keep up the dignity of our Government and hold the posts we have acquired, no matter how.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, something said by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] suggests to me the propriety of adding a word to prevent what might be otherwise misconstrued in what I have already said.

The Senator speaks of the necessity of maintaining the flag in the Philippines, and of doing our full duty there, whatever that may be, and of the consequent necessity of a large army there. I am utterly opposed to the present bill, not because it gives the requisite number of men to maintain the authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere, but because that which is recognized and stated to be simply an emergency is taken advantage of to ingraft upon the statute books of this country a law which will create a permanent standing army, which shall not be required after the emergency is passed, but which is only required during the continuance of the emergency.

Now, Mr. President, Senators here will probably remember that when this question was before the Senate two years ago I voted and spoke for the bill which is now upon the statute book, which provided a temporary force sufficient to meet the emergency which was then upon us. I am ready to do so now, Mr. President. I am ready now to vote for a bill which shall be limited as to time and which will meet the necessities of the present, and in so doing I do not in any manner waive the objections which I have expressed to the policy which has led to this war.

I took the position two years ago that whether that policy was one of which I approved or not, having been adopted by the Government and our Army being there, it was our duty to sustain it; that we must defend the soldiers who were there from the destruction which would await them if they were not supported by proper reenforcements, whether they were sent there under a policy which we approved or not. I say that now.

Mr. President, under no possible circumstances, from a variety of points of view, could I be induced to withhold the requisite number of men to maintain the authority of the United States in the Philippines. Aside from the duty which I hold (of course I know some Senators differ from me on the subject) or from the duty which I recognize as imposed upon every Senator to maintain the authority of the Government in its enterprise when it has been legally determined upon, whether he approves of that enterprise or not, there are some matters which come closer home to me than that. Of the soldiers who are in the Philippine Islands my State has its full proportion, if not a greater proportion. In the Army which was raised for the Spanish-American war the State of Georgia furnished more men in proportion to its population than any other State of the United States, and of the whole State the town in which I live furnished a greater proportion, according to population, than any other community in that State. The Twenty-ninth Regiment, now in the Philippine Islands, was raised almost exclusively in my State. Among its officers and in its ranks are men who are my personal friends. They are the sons of my neighbors. Mr. President, in that army in the Philippines there are to-day men of my own blood and those of my own household.

Nothing is further from me, Mr. President, than to suggest that we should fail to put in the Philippine Islands whatever men may be necessary to maintain the policy that the Government has entered upon, whether that policy be right or wrong. I would change that policy if I could, and change it promptly; but as I can not change it—as the Government is there committed to it—as our soldiers are there, we must maintain the Army.

But that is not to be made the excuse for a permanent army, and that is my objection to this bill. I recognize that the present discussion is to some extent premature and that the time for general debate has not come; but I want some Senator during this debate to answer the question which has been propounded here to-day, that if the necessity for this great Army is a necessity growing out of the present emergency, why is it that the bill proposes not to provide an army for an emergency, but to provide an army for all time of this magnitude?

Mr. President, there are several ways in which it seems to me we could proceed, and by which we could accomplish the desired end and at the same time avoid the great evil of a great standing army in this Republic. We do not need any great standing army in this Republic, for the only necessity for any great armament to-day grows out of the anomalous condition of affairs which now exists.

We can meet the question by providing, as we did two years ago, for a temporary force, and we will do no violence to our institutions. We will make no threat against the peaceful structure that our forefathers erected and under which they hoped we would live in peace and security, the guardians of our own safety, ourselves our own rulers, and not ruled by anyone or menaced by any army.

Mr. President, it has been brought to my attention to-day that one of our great metropolitan dailies has made a suggestion which it seems to me has great pith in it and the idea might be practically elaborated. It might be perfected in such a way as to meet the emergency and at the same time put away from us what to me is a horrible specter, not only of an army of 100,000 men, but of an army of several hundred thousand men.

Mr. President, that is not a mere fancy. I have not seen the article myself, but I saw in a newspaper an article quoting the New York Tribune (whether it quoted it correctly or not I do not know) in the month of November, in which it stated that the number of 100,000 was in all probability not that which this Government would be called upon to maintain as an army, but that with the new career upon which we had entered it might be, and probably would be, several hundred thousand. Did anyone ever see it in the New York paper? I do not say it was there. I expressly disclaim having seen it. I can only say that I saw in another paper an editorial which charged that it had said it.

But, Mr. President, it does not depend upon the New York paper. It does not depend upon the fact that it suggested it. It stands to reason that if we are to enter upon this policy and to pursue it there is no reason why we should be limited to 100,000; and I say to me that is a horrible specter in this free Republic, which was never designed to be maintained by force and which was never intended to rest under the threat of the menace of a great standing army. It is to me a horrible specter that there should be gradually imposed upon us, never to be released from it, a great standing army by which we would sooner or later be dominated.

I repeat, that I have been struck by a suggestion which I understand (I have not seen this, either; I have been told it to-day) has been made in one of our metropolitan papers, and that is that if the emergency in the Philippine Islands calls for a great army, let us raise an army for the Philippine Islands. Let the standing army of the United States remain at the number that our domestic requirements will make necessary, and let the Military Committee of the Senate prepare and present to the Senate a bill which will provide a special army for the special needs of the Philippine Islands. Then while we might have the increased expense, which is very much to be deprecated, we would be freed from that which is very much more to be deprecated, the incubus and the menace of a great standing army which, when once put upon us, we will never be relieved from.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of going into this discussion. I have been led further into it than I ought possibly to have gone. I rose simply for the purpose of answering the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. So far as I know, while I have had no consultation with Senators on this side of the Chamber, I believe I speak what is the general sentiment, that whatever is necessary to be done for the emergency we are ready to do, but we are not to be forced to do that which we disapprove; we are not to be forced to the support of a bill which shall impose upon this country for all time a great standing army, by the alleged necessities of the present, under an emergency, and under any suggestion as to a failure to support the flag, and to support the authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands. For one, and I believe I echo the sentiments of others, we are ready to do what is necessary for the emergency, but we are not ready that that emergency shall be used as an excuse for fastening upon this country a standing army which will not be needed when the emergency has passed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] would state a little more fully the evidence on which he bases what he said to the Senate just now, that we are at war; that it is a war likely to continue for several years, and to demand the number of troops he stated, which he says has been at one time 79,000 in the Philippine Islands, if I understood him correctly, and is likely to remain or should remain undiminished for some years to come.

Now, Mr. President, here is what the President says in his message, and I should like to understand the situation if I can. I regard the Senator from New Jersey as a great military authority, and as a high authority also as one of the great committee which has this special subject in charge. Here is what the President said four weeks ago:

> Our forces have successfully controlled the greater part of the islands, overcoming the organized forces of the insurgents and carrying order and administrative regularity to all quarters.

Then he goes on, the ordinary administrative regularity having been established all over the islands:

> By the spring of this year the effective opposition of the dissatisfied Tagals to the authority of the United States was virtually ended, thus opening the door for the extension of a stable administration over much of the territory of the Archipelago.

I did not suppose that that was consistent with the prospect of a great war requiring at least 79,000 men for a great many years to come.

Mr. SEWELL. In answer to the Senator from Massachusetts I will state that I did not say it would require 79,000.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator said they had been there, and the number would have to remain.

Mr. SEWELL. We sent some to China, and we brought the sick home, in accordance with the law requiring the sick and disabled to be brought home. But I say there are 420 posts or towns that the Army occupies in the Philippines, which is an immense country, as you all know, probably fifteen hundred miles long and with numerous islands, eight hundred or a thousand; I do not believe they have ever been able to arrive at the number as yet. There the flag floats and there are two companies at a post. But if you send out a scouting party of ten or twenty men they are immediately attacked from the outside. They are in very many cases either captured or annihilated, and that is going on all through the islands. That makes war, because if you will look at the reports of the general commanding you will find that every two weeks or every four weeks there were so many men killed, so many wounded, and so many died of disease in hospital. They are becoming reduced at all times. That is the situation. I have said, and I think it is the view of the Secretary of War, that it will take 60,000 men in the Philippines for some time to come.

Mr. HOAR. But the substance of the question I have put to the Senator is this: According to his information, is the explanation we have received from the President within four weeks correct or not? Let me read it again. That—

> The effective opposition * * * to the authority of the United States was virtually ended.

That—

Our forces have successfully controlled—

Not a few military posts, but—the greater part of the islands—

And have ever since last spring—

overcoming the organized forces of the insurgents and carrying order—

Carrying order—

and administrative regularity—

Which is the power of administering laws regularly—to all quarters.

Mr. SEWELL. I think the President meant that that was so when he made the statement. I think he probably got it from some of the officers in command.

Mr. HOAR. Have those conditions changed in four weeks to the conditions described by my honorable friend from New Jersey?

Mr. SEWELL. They have very materially changed of late. We have more skirmishes now than we have had almost since the commencement of that war.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator how many men he thinks will be required in the Philippines during the coming year?

Mr. SEWELL. Not less than 60,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Through the whole year?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes; I think 60,000 men would be quite short. We would have to abandon a great many posts, and we would have to throw the people in the vicinity of those posts open to murder and rapine for having defended us, and that ought not to be done.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, if he will give me his attention a moment, what number does General MacArthur say that he needs?

Mr. SEWELL. I have not seen his statement as to the number he wants.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that the public press states that he says he wants 100,000 men.

Mr. SEWELL. All military officers want all they can get.

Mr. TELLER. If this bill is for that purpose, why not have it give 100,000 men for the Philippines?

Mr. SEWELL. I do not think there is a necessity for 100,000 men in the Philippines, but there is a necessity for 60,000 or 70,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am really a little surprised by the alarm of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. He knows we have a brave and patriotic army. If he were in the presence of 50,000 of them, I do not think he would make a speech that implied that our lives or our liberties were in danger. We heard that talk a great deal during the latter part of the war for the Union; but while people were singing those mournful songs and prophesying all things unhappy and wicked, the boys were swinging along, singing "Johnny comes marching home." They wanted to go home.

Do you suppose those men did not love their country? They gave all the evidence mankind can give of the greatest love and devotion. They were ready to die. They did die. They went into battle singing. A wounded man would tell a man to carry his canteen of water to the other fellow who was hurt worse. I have seen four men going along, each holding one corner of a big blanket, and carrying a 175-pound man 5 or 6 miles. Everything in the world that exhibits beautiful valor, courage, gentle feeling, patriotism, was in that Army at the close of the war. And if during the war at any time our Confederate friends had marched out and extended their hands, they would have been embraced by the entire United States Army. There was no one who desired to kill anybody unnecessarily there; but we were so situated that we were obliged to kill some of our dear friends. There was no real murder in it.

I do not think that the Senator was afraid of the liberties of his country when he saw a million and a quarter men going home to be peaceably mustered out, returning to their old vocations, delighting to get home, singing patriotic songs, and worshiping the old flag. Our liberties in danger! Why, his own troops, three months after Appomattox, would have come out to defend the United States with every drop of their blood against a foreign enemy. They said so, and I believe them. They have endeavored to prove it to a very considerable extent in the late war with Spain and in all this guerrilla and brigand war in the Philippines. It is a slander upon the soldiers of the war for the Union, and this war, too, to say that the liberties of their country are to be endangered. Make the number half a million, so far as that is concerned, and you know you would not have any apprehension. Who is to lead them to an empire and a dictatorship? Pick out a man in the Army against whom the bitterest enemy can get up a single suspicion of the doubt of his merit or of his sense of duty. Nobody can specify the man.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator recall that one of the generals of the Army, I have forgotten whom, at a banquet in New York stated that the Constitution had been worn out; that it was outgrown and did not apply to the present condition?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not read it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It was Merritt or Merriam, I have forgotten whom.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not read of any such foolish man.

Mr. TILLMAN. The newspapers, you know, will tell lies. I do not know whether that was one of them or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think they must have listened to some of the exaggerations of the Senator from South Carolina and have been a little stimulated to talk severely about their country.

Mr. TILLMAN. But this was the report of a banquet. The Senator from South Carolina sometimes possibly is a little erratic and wild in his talk, but he generally tries to say what he thinks and to tell the truth as he understands it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, if the Senator really thinks the country is to be torn down and anarchy is to prevail, I suggest that the Senate adjourn and that we all go home and blockade our doors and clean our rifles. I am, even at my age, quite ready to fight in an emergency like that, and I presume every man on that side is. He can not see an enemy in sight, and he never will, with——

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is trying to belittle a great principle involved here, which we have inherited from our fathers, to beware of large standing armies and depend rather upon volunteers in cases of emergency; and because we can not agree with him he ought not to undertake to eject into this debate these allusions to the war between the States forty years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not allude to that unkindly at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why bring it in at all? We are discussing the future policy of the Government and not the past actions of people who were as honest and patriotic as the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was telling the Senator that all his people down South are just about as patriotic as we are, and the Union is not in the slightest danger from them.

By a law enacted March 2, 1899, the President was "authorized to maintain the Regular Army at a strength not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, to be distributed among the several branches of the service, including the Signal Corps, and raise a force of not more than 35,000 volunteers, to be recruited as he may determine from the country at large or from the localities where their services are needed." We were entreated to send our recruiting officers to the South, and a great deal of it was done with very happy effect. This army of nearly 100,000 men was brought into the field and organized, but the law provided "that the officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army should be mustered out of the military service, as provided in the act of April 22, 1898." The act proceeds to say:

That each and every provision of said act shall continue in force until July 1, 1901, and on and after that date all the general staff and line officers appointed to the Army under this act shall be discharged and the numbers restored in each grade to those existing at the passage of said act.

It also provided that such increased regular and volunteer force shall continue in service only during the necessity therefor, and not later than July 1, 1901. That is something that the Military Committee was obliged, in order to raise any troops at all, to yield to.

Mr. TELLER. Who obliged the committee to do it?

Mr. HAWLEY. Men who said they could not vote for the bill at all if we did not say that, and men who felt so, too. "And the enlisted force of the line of the Army shall be reduced to the number as provided for by a law," as referred to there, an old law bringing it down to about 26,000 or 27,000 men; but with the addition of fifteen hundred or two thousand men (the figures are here given) in those two artillery regiments, we call it roughly 29,000 men.

Now, that is certainly not more than what would be a sufficient guard for our own country. There are places where we know we have to keep people because we are in danger of anarchistic and revolutionary and insurrectionary outbreaks, and our men are scattered throughout the country, after a great deal of study as to where it is worth while to put 500 men, or where to put a thousand men. It is not a matter of random at all.

We are not altogether out of sight of some possibility of war yet with some European power. We do not know. They are in a great deal of trouble there, and I understand they look with very great jealousy upon our talk of a Danish island and our talk about acquiring other territory.

Now, I do not think it is possible to suppose that any intelligent citizen would pretend that an army of 29,000 is sufficient to meet any such requirements—that is, to cover the whole field. Under the existing law 69,000 soldiers must be discharged before July 1, 1901. This work has commenced already. There are ships coming now across the ocean that are bearing from a thousand to fourteen hundred or fifteen hundred men. They are sick men or men who have been lately sick, and the Government has been carefully and kindly sending them away as soon as it can, for they are not useful there as soldiers, and it is the desire to get them here into a better climate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry right there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is in reference to the disposition of a number of soldiers who have been dishonorably discharged under court-martial for some trivial offense. I have had information of one man who was convicted of something trifling in military discipline and dishonorably discharged, and he has been turned loose somewhere out there in Luzon. His father knew nothing about it and wrote me a pitiful letter asking me to try and find out what had become of his boy, who was with the flag. The only answer I could get from the War Department was that he had been court-martialed last March, had served his sentence of six months, had been discharged at some interior point in the island, and that is the end of it.

Is there any provision in this bill requiring that an American who has gone over there to serve under the flag shall be transported at least back to his own shores after he has done what he could for the Army, or will the Senator accept some amendment which will require the War Department to bring back those Americans to their own country instead of turning them loose there among those Malays to be butchered?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the first intimation I have heard from the other side that the Malays would butcher anybody.

Mr. TILLMAN. They have butchered about 5,000 men in uniform, even with the flag, from what I have heard. They are shooting them, according to the statement of the Senator from New Jersey, every time they go out from a fortified place or a post; that we hold some 400 posts and the balance of the islands belong to the natives, and we dare not send out foraging parties or anybody else without danger of being shot. That is the condition in which we find ourselves.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, I am obliged to the Senator for taking up my argument and saying just what I say and what I believe.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not know that I was assisting the Senator. I am very much gratified that I have helped him to present his case. But I present another form of it, in regard to the condition of those Americans who have volunteered and gone over there and who have been court-martialed by the military authorities of the Regular Army, and who have been turned loose there, without anything under high heaven, to the mercy of those Malays, who I say are savages or semisavages, and it ought not to be done. The United States Government owes it to itself to transport back at least to this country every man who has gone there under the flag, if he has been guilty of some little trifling offense contrary to the discipline and good order of a soldier.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Government has been very generous and careful.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has brought home a good many maniacs—I saw a notice of that—but what has it done with the other boys who went out there, and who were not used to military discipline and were guilty of some trifling breach of it, and who were court-martialed and were discharged after serving their sentence?

Mr. HAWLEY. If a man will steal and rob——

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of stealing, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. What did the man do?

Mr. TILLMAN. It was something trivial; I do not know what. I have not got the case in hand. I only know that his father wrote to me to "please find out what has become of my son," who belonged to such and such a regiment. I wrote to the War Department to inquire, and the answer returned was that he had been court-martialed at such and such a place last spring, that he was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged after six months' imprisonment, that he served his imprisonment in the Philippines and was discharged in October, "since which time we know nothing about him."

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not know——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to know what the charge was.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not make any difference what the charge was. He ought to have been brought back to America and imprisoned here. He ought to have been imprisoned among his own people.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator answered my question before I asked it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad I am assisting my friends over there. There is telepathy here or a kind of mental connection between myself and the gentlemen on the other side, it seems to me. I am helping the Senator from Connecticut, and the Senator from Wisconsin also, to interpret his own words.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must not fall into the error of supposing that there is any mental connection between him and me just now. What I wanted to ask the Senator was this: If he does not know of what offense this man was court-martialed, how does he know that it was not robbery?

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not matter what it was; he ought to have been brought home. He should have been punished in America, and after his punishment was over he should have been returned to the place where he enlisted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. The only course for us is to carefully collect the judgments of the very able and highly honorable and patriotic military gentlemen at the head of our forces and at the head of our different departments of the Government, and if they say there can not be peace there, and we know there can not be unless something like the existing Army be maintained, we ought to be wise enough to act in accordance with it. We ought to raise the necessary number of troops cheerfully and take good care of them, and put down the crimes and insurrections and robberies and burnings that are going on there—said to be, on the authority of the Senator from South Carolina—and say to the whole of them, "Stop! Throw down your arms and go home! If you do not, we will hunt you like wild animals;" and then follow that or accompany that with all we have been in reality doing—more than was ever done by any country, Christian or heathen.

We have gone to work with the arts of peace to see if we can not win, if not affection, respect and obedience from those people. We are building them wagon roads and railroads. We are covering the islands with telegraphs, so that MacArthur in his headquarters at Manila can communicate now with every post he has, and a hundred men can be started out in a hurry to relieve some beleaguered post. We have encouraged their schools and their churches. We have given them, undoubtedly, a great deal of surgical and medical care. Whenever it has been possible to do any work that would come near the hearts of that people we have done it, and we have made a very considerable impression, I judge, from the various circumstances.

But I get some private letters occasionally from some very bright young men. I am happy to say that I was successful in getting a few into the military service, and they write remarkably good letters, and they set forth the dangers there as very serious. They do not believe the fight is out of those people, and they do not know how soon it will be out of them. They have no idea that it will be anything less than the greatest cruelty to withdraw from the islands or to reduce the force to 20,000 or anything of that sort. Those people are the descendants of those who for three hundred years have been trampled upon and robbed, and whose gospel it is to hate their ruler. They are constitutionally enemies of the man who is over them, for whatever reason. They can not be cured in a week, in a month, in a year, in five or ten years. They will get over it as other savage peoples do, just as some of our ancestors in Great Britain got over it. But it is a slow job. I do not pretend to say it can be done in six weeks, or in six months, or in a year; but it could not be done with 6,000 men or 10,000 men. There is no question about that.

So the Military Committee, myself excepted, have studied this question with a good deal of interest. Of the eleven men on that committee eleven have been soldiers and officers, too, in one army or the other. I am willing to trust their judgment. I have found it a kind, a just, and a determined judgment, as occasion required. I do not think we are mistaken about this. I think we are sure that there ought to be a good army kept there. As to withdrawing it, every officer from the President down to the doorkeeper would be only too much gratified if he could see the army relieved. Nobody wants unnecessary war. Nobody really likes, except some wild, chivalrous boy, to go off to war. Nobody likes the heavy taxation and the increase of debt which accompany that condition of affairs.

No, Mr. President, I see no way by which the American people can escape the duty of maintaining a strong Army, according to the exigencies, and not to exceed a certain figure. We have the limitations here. They have all been read to you; and the excess among those men would go home just as happily as our boys did from Atlanta.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the questions presented by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] require thoughtful consideration and full answer in order that the passage of this bill may be justified. An increase of the Army of the United States upon a permanent basis to the limit of 100,000 can not be lightly passed by as of inconsiderable moment if the necessity for such action does not exist. If a temporary force will serve the purpose the permanent force is invoked to serve, and serve the purpose quite as well, then, Mr. President, the temporary force and not the proposed permanent force should be employed.

Now, I insist that upon the face of the record, in the light of our experience of recent years, the necessity exists for at least an Army of 100,000 men, and that the President's message, temperate in tone and careful in expression, as it is, does not show that that necessity has passed away. I believe that the situation should be dealt with by a permanent rather than by a temporary force, that being, in my judgment, the most effective manner of dealing with the situation in view of the temper of the people with whom we are called upon to deal.

When the treaty of Paris was ratified this body imposed upon the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, a duty which he could not, if he would, avoid or evade.

Later on, in pursuance of the terms of that treaty, this body, acting in conjunction with the other branch of Congress, passed a law appropriating the sum of $20,000,000 to pay for the Philippine Islands, or the public property of Spain located there. From that day to this, aside from current appropriations to maintain the Army, Congress has not written one solitary word upon the statute books of the United States to guide or to limit the President in dealing with that possession of the United States. We occupy the Philippine Islands by a treaty. That treaty is to the President of the United States, as it is to every citizen, part of the supreme law of this land. He can not, without opening his conduct to charges of impeachment, surrender one single foot of the Philippine Islands to organized forces within the islands or to organized forces from without the islands. It is his bounden duty, under his oath of office, to protect the property of the United States within the islands and to maintain law and order there to the extent of such ability as Congress may provide him with.

We do know that about the time or shortly after that treaty of peace was ratified an insurrection broke out in the islands. The history of that insurrection is fairly well known in a general way. It became known in the course of events that a sort of temporary or provisional government had been established by the insurgents; that they had what purported to be a congress; that they had what seemed to be an organized army, fairly disciplined and commanded by competent officers. It appeared as a fact that this army at different times made one stand after another, and that engagements approaching the dignity of battles were fought with that organized force. It appeared that this organized force was receiving orders from a central government. This central government moved from place to place in the presence of our approaching army, and finally the situation came about to which the President refers in his message. The organized forces became disintegrated; the government of the Filipino republic, so called, disappeared; organized resistance as such, recognized in war, disappeared, and the remnant of what had been an organized army broke up into guerrilla bands, save and except to the extent that the soldiers again returned to their ordinary vocations and became peaceable citizens.

A commission was appointed for the purpose of establishing civil government amongst a people where anarchy had prevailed, or where the Filipino government had theretofore asserted its right to rule. This commission proceeded to the Philippine Islands, and, according to its own report, progress has been steadily made not only in establishing civil government in different localities, but in inculcating the principles of free government amongst the body of the people of the island of Luzon and elsewhere.

But, Mr. President, it is a fact clear, I think, from all the records, not to be disputed by anyone, that where this civil strife existed in different islands amongst people of varying degrees of civilization, it was not to be expected that immediately upon the disintegration of the army of the Filipinos perfect order and peace would everywhere reign supreme. Such has never been the case even amongst the most highly civilized of communities. Disorder and lawlessness have always followed in the wake of war. The President of the United States, not only charged with putting down insurrection, but charged likewise with maintaining law and order, has had to deal with these refractory bodies of men making incursions now and then into peaceful settlements. They can not be fought in the open because they disappear into the brush when assailed; they do not assail large bodies of troops, but seek to waylay and ambush detached parties going from place to place.

Mr. President, 60,000 men will not be in action, under arms, from day to day, nor will probably 10,000 men be assembled at any one place in the Philippine Islands in the next five years, but that a strong police force, well established and well regulated, must be maintained at the 300 or 400 posts being held goes without the saying. We must police the islands with the troops of the United States until such time as we can educate the people themselves to maintain law and order, to protect life and property. By the concurrent testimony of all the officers having to do with the situation, at least 60,000 men will be required to maintain this police system.

Mr. BACON. How long?

Mr. CARTER. That remains to be seen.

Mr. BACON. In the opinion of the Senator, how long?

Mr. CARTER. I have not sufficient knowledge upon which to base an opinion that would be worthy of any sort of reliance. I know as much about it probably as the Senator from Georgia, and no more.

Mr. BACON. The Senator recognizes, I presume, that it will be for an indefinite period. I entertain a similar opinion.

Mr. CARTER. I think the word "indefinite" would fit very well.

Mr. BACON. Under present conditions.

Mr. CARTER. An indefinite time would be a good classification.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know of the Senator from Montana why he says 60,000 men? Why not say 80,000 or 90,000? I want to know if he is not aware that the officer in command has declared it would take 100,000 men?

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator from Colorado in that behalf that it has been recently reported to the Committee on Military Affairs that the number of men necessary to hold the various stations and maintain order will be considerably diminished by the extension of the cable and telegraph system through the islands. It is at present necessary, owing to the tardy manner of communicating from one island to another, to maintain a force at each and every point capable of furnishing sufficient resistance to meet any force that might appear in front of a town or city or post. If, on the other hand, rapid communication obtains, and telegraphic information could be sent to central points, the outlying posts need not be so strongly guarded as under present conditions.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's speech, but it does seem to me, as the chairman has failed to tell us, that somebody else ought to tell us if this is a bill for the purpose of taking care of the Philippine Islands—which I deny. I insist that it has no connection with it whatever; that is a temporary thing that should be dealt with separately from this. I want to know why the committee does not come here and tell us how large an army is needed over there. One Senator says 100,000, another says 60,000, and another 40,000.

Mr. CARTER. In answer to the Senator from Colorado, I will state that probably there are those who, dealing with indefinite conditions, may be able to make positive statements. The Committee on Military Affairs, however, accepting the judgment of the Secretary of War, that being based in turn upon all the reports that have been received from officers in service in the Philippines and elsewhere, reached the conclusion that an army of 100,000 men would be sufficient, and that a less number would probably be insufficient to meet the conditions with which we are confronted. As to whether 60,000, or 80,000, or 79,000 men will be required in the Philippines at a given time I am unable to say, and therefore will not pretend to say.

I do suggest, however, that in the light of the testimony given before the committee the extension of the telegraphic lines to the various islands will appreciably diminish the number of men required to hold each of the respective posts. Having this work to do, Congress not being prepared to relieve by proper enactment the President from his responsibility in the Philippine Islands, no citizen of the country in or out of Congress being willing that we shall at this time in any ignoble or disgraceful manner shirk from the duty of this hour, I insist we are left with but one question to determine, to wit, Can this situation best be met by providing a temporary force or organization of 100,000 men, to be sent to the Philippines, or is it more wise to provide for a permanent force of adequate proportions to meet the requirements?

That brings up a little history, Mr. President. About two years ago we undertook to have a permanent organization to deal with the Philippine situation. The bill was presented here very near the close of a session of Congress. All desired to avoid an extra session, and in consequence a compromise measure was presented, and finally passed, which provided that the Army should practically be reduced to 27,000 men on the 1st day of July, 1901.

Let me say now, if human nature in the Philippines is akin to human nature the world over, that tentative measure was a positive detriment to the American arms and to the American Government. It held out to the Filipino insurgents in arms and to those who sympathized with them the hope that conditions would arise under which our Army would be reduced and the Philippine Islands abandoned to the Filipino insurrectionists.

Temporizing with a situation of this kind is expensive and cruel. It would have been far better, in my humble judgment, if two years ago Congress had by its action virtually said to the Filipinos and to the world, "We propose to establish and maintain law and order and respect for the flag of the United States in the Philippine Islands regardless of the cost and regardless of the time that that task may take." To provide another temporary force now is to fan into flame the slumbering embers of rebellion. Who doubts that? It is to give encouragement to the lawless element to organize again in the hope that some Congress, to be organized hereafter, will refuse to do the duty, which we in a temporizing manner do, and thus leave our army over there incapable of maintaining law and order or the sovereignty of the United States.

It rests with Congress to diminish this force at any time it will by direct enactment or by refusing support through the appropriation bills. Every section of this bill that provides for the enlistment of men provides that in no event shall the maximum number enlisted at any time exceed 100,000. The next session of Congress can limit this below 54,000, and make appropriation only for 25,000, or a smaller number.

The ghost of a standing army, because we authorize an adequate number of troops to discharge this duty, is based, and can only be based, upon the theory that the Congress of the country will prove false to its trust when the time comes to reduce the Army. The Army, whether fixed temporarily or permanently, will be at all times within the control of Congress.

I submit to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] and to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that since we as a people are united in the belief that we can not avoid the duty of maintaining the sovereignty of the United States and maintaining law and order in the Philippines—since, I say, we are united upon that proposition—since there is no sentiment anywhere favoring a disgraceful retreat from the post of duty in that country, then we have but one question to determine, and that is whether we shall encourage the task to grow by temporary action, or seize it firmly and dispose of it finally, and then trust ourselves to reduce our Army when the conditions warrant.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, my contention is that the purpose and the inevitable effect of this legislation is not simply to provide a force that may be needed by the emergency of which the Senator speaks, but to permanently increase the standing army of the United States to at least 100,000 men. The thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana is this, that before there was any conflict between the Filipinos and the United States forces the Secretary of War, not on account of the Filipinos at all—there was no such allegation—recommended that the standing army of the United States should be increased to 100,000 men, and the President in his annual message to Congress immediately thereafter stated that the recommendation of the Secretary of War in that regard—if I do not quote his language correctly, these are the words which linger in my mind—met with his hearty concurrence. Certainly he used words to that effect.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that such was the recommendation of the Secretary of War, such was the recommendation of the President of the United States, and immediately thereafter a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, passed the House of Representatives, and was sent to this body, creating an army of 100,000 men as the standing permanent army of the United States. I put the two things together—the fact that there is no limitation of time upon this proposed increase of the Army, which is professed now to be for the purpose of meeting an emergency. That fact must be taken in connection with the other fact I have stated, that before the emergency arose it not only was the purpose, as expressed by the Executive Department, to increase the Army to 100,000 men, but that the House of Representatives absolutely passed a bill for that purpose and sent it to the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the legislative situation to which the Senator refers was brought about by the Spanish-American war.

Mr. BACON. It was after that war was concluded.

Mr. CARTER. And when that war was concluded we were brought face to face with the conditions that practically confront us now. Unquestionably, sir, when the Spanish-American war was concluded by the ratification of the treaty of peace in this Chamber——

Mr. BACON. But the treaty had not then been ratified.

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. President, there was no doubt in the minds of Senators or people outside of the Senate that the treaty of peace when ratified would of necessity cast upon the Government the task of maintaining law and order in Cuba, and the possible limits to which our territorial acquisitions might extend were to be provided for. That war brought forth and accentuated in a very marked degree the necessity for proper coast defenses.

Who can fail to recall the feeling of alarm that extended from the coast of Maine down to the coast of Florida with the possibility staring the people in the face of a Spanish cruiser sailing into any one of the commercial ports along that vast extent of coast? We found we were not provided with coast defenses. Suddenly, with that remarkable energy displayed by our people and Government in emergencies, we rushed into the coast-defense business with great vigor, with the result that we soon had a line of coast-defense batteries set up, requiring a marked increase of the artillery force of the United States, so that now 18,000 men are required in the artillery arm, and the original standard or maximum of the Regular Army only amounted to 27,500 men in all branches of the service.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me right there?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will bear in mind that at the last session the Senate passed a bill, the original bill for which the present bill we are now considering is proposed as a substitute by the House, in which the Senate assumed and adjudged that 5,000 men were all that were required for increased coast defenses additional to what we had. This morning, in order that I might be sure as to that point, I asked the Senator from Vermont whether or not, in the opinion of the Senator, that was a proper estimate of the increased number required for this particular branch of the service needed in the coast defenses, and he replied that it was. So that what the Senator from Montana now so eloquently refers to as the necessity for coast defenses is no defense for the contention that we need an army of 100,000 men, when 5,000 men, according to the judgment of the Senate, was all that was needed as an increase in order that the coast defenses might be properly manned by the artillery.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. CARTER. I will yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. I was not aware that I made the statement just in the form the Senator from Georgia has given it; but I will say that this bill provides only a slight additional increase of the artillery over what was provided for by the bill as it passed the Senate last winter. This bill provides for five additional regiments of artillery.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the minimum?

Mr. PROCTOR. The minimum is stated on the slip the Senator has. The minimum of artillery is 13,872, and the maximum 20,592.

Mr. BACON. But this requirement, as I understood, was met in the opinion of the Senate committee by the former action of the Senate by the addition of 5,000 men, as provided in the original bill as it passed the Senate, and by the slightly increased number which is provided for in the present bill. So that it does not relate to the 100,000. That necessity will be met by an increase of something like 5,000.

Mr. CARTER. I well remember the bill to which the Senator refers as having been presented for the consideration of the Senate. It did provide for an army of 100,000. There is no question about that. The Senate subsequently passed a bill providing for an army of 100,000, and that bill was practically passed by unanimous consent through this body.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, in the one case the bill as it came from the House was a bill providing for an army of 100,000 men as the Regular Army of the United States, and the other bill, to which the Senator refers, was a bill which provided for a temporary army of 65,000 regulars and 35,000 volunteers, to be disbanded, except 29,000, at the end of two years.

Mr. CARTER. There is no doubt about that. We can not disagree on the facts. The bill that came to the Senate for consideration provided for an army of 100,000 men, and that was to be a permanent army. The Senate passed a bill providing for 65,000 of the Regular Army and 35,000 volunteers, and put the limitation of time, fixing it on the 1st day of July, 1901.

Now, it is with the principle of that tentative measure that I take issue. I insist that it was unwise in dealing with this Filipino situation to give to the Filipinos in arms, or organizing and endeavoring to organize, notice that this Government was only going to fight them just a little while, and that if they could hold out until 1st day of July, 1901, they would prevail over the United States, the Congress having given no authority to continue an army in existence as an effective force after that date. If you now pass a bill providing that this temporizing movement shall continue but for a little period longer, you will invite hostility and commotion where fair intentions and peace may now be found in the islands: you will give the agitator, who wants to collect taxes over there on his own account, a fair warrant to go to his people and say, "Wake up to the situation now; the Congress of the United States does not authorize the President to proceed beyond a certain date. Let us work up to that date."

Mr. President, it will be economical, it will prove humane, and unquestionably wise to have the Filipino people understand henceforth, without equivocation of any kind, that it is the set purpose of the United States to establish law and order in those islands and to maintain our sovereignty there; and this purpose will be best subserved by having it understood that the Army is to be permanent and not temporary.

CUBAN FUNDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In reply to a resolution of the Senate of December 19, 1900, directing the Secretary of War "to transmit to the Senate the report of Abraham L. Lawshe, giving in detail the result of his investigations, made under the direction of the War Department, into the receipts and expenditures of Cuban funds," the Senate is informed that for the reasons stated in the accompanying communication from the Secretary of War, dated December 28, 1900, it is not deemed compatible with the public interest to transmit the report to the Senate at this time.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 3, 1901.

Mr. BACON. There is another communication—the one referred to in the President's message.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let the letter of the Secretary of War be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of War will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 28, 1900.

To the President:

I have received from the Secretary of the Senate a copy of a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 19th of December, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of Abraham L. Lawshe, giving in detail the result of his investigations, made under the direction of the War Department, into the receipts and expenditures of Cuban funds."

The document referred to is a confidential report of an investigation made under your authority for the purpose of enabling you, through this Department, to properly direct the prosecution of certain offenders against the laws of Cuba. The prosecutions are now pending. While they are pending it is not, in my judgment, compatible with the public interests that the report should be made public.

I transmit a copy of the report, together with the resolution, for your action or instructions.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the message of the President and the accompanying communication may be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask that it may be printed and lie over until to-morrow, when I shall ask to call it up. I should like to have it read.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what necessity, if any, exists for increasing the Army at this time; what are the conditions in the Philippines, and how many men are required there. The President is also requested to send to the Senate copies of all communications received from our officers in the Philippines showing the conditions in that country and the number of men required now and in the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be printed and lie over.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RICHARD A. WISE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolutions from the House of Representatives; which were read:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. RICHARD A. WISE, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of 17 members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Williamsburg, and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask leave to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. RICHARD ALSOP WISE, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 4, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, we bless and magnify Thy holy name; for while months, years, centuries may come and go, Thou art ever the same, administering to the wants and necessities of Thy children, leading them when they know it not into green pastures and by the side of still waters, imparting unto them strength when they are weak, illumining their minds when they are in darkness, and comforting them when they are in sorrow. We bless Thee for all the achievements and successes of the past, for the opportunities of the present, and for the bright hopes and promises of the future. Especially do we remember with gratitude the marvelous achievements of our own nation; and we pray Thee that Thou wilt bless the President of the United States, all his advisers, and keep them and him in the way of truth. Let Thy blessing now descend in full measure upon the Speaker of this House and all the members. Guide them in their legislative acts so that the history that they are now making may be pure, good, true history, that all the world shall be proud of it.

Since we last met, death has entered the Congressional circle and taken away one of its members, known for his gentleness and sweetness of spirit. We pray Thee that Thou wilt be with his family, and comfort, guide, and sustain them. And so, Heavenly Father, with confidence that Thou wilt still guide and protect us, we give Thee hearty thanks and rejoice in Thy presence forevermore, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the last session, December 21, 1900, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MARSH for two weeks, on account of important business.

REPRESENTATION.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the privileged resolution which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the continued enjoyment of full representation in this House by any State which has, for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, denied to any of the male inhabitants thereof being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States the right to vote for Representatives in Congress, Presidential electors, and other specified officers is in direct violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that in such case "the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which such male citizens bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State," and is an invasion of the rights and dignity of this House and of its members and an infringement upon the rights and privileges in this House of other States and their Representatives; and

Whereas since the last apportionment the States of Mississippi, South Carolina, and Louisiana have, by changes in the constitutions and statutes of said States, and for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, denied the right of suffrage to male inhabitants 21 years of age, citizens of the United States, and such denial in each of said States extends to more than one-half of those who, prior thereto, were entitled to vote, as appears from the following statistics, published in the Congressional Directories of the Fifty-second and Fifty-sixth Congresses, viz.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is this a proposition offered for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. This is offered as a matter of privilege.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that it is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not decide that until he hears the document read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one members present, not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. OLMSTED. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The motion was agreed to; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 92, answered "present" 19, counted present 2, not voting 177; as follows:

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. LITTLE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair notes as present the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. PEARRE, and the Speaker. On this vote the yeas were 66; and the nays were 92; answering "present," 19; noted present, 2; making a total of 179 members—a quorum—and so the House refuses to adjourn.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk continued to read, as follows:

In the seven districts of Mississippi the total vote cast for all Congressional candidates in 1890 was 62,652; in 1898, 27,045. In the seven districts of South Carolina the total vote in 1890 was 73,522, and 28,831 in 1898. In the six districts of Louisiana 74,542 in 1890, and 33,161 in 1898.

One member of the present House, representing ten counties in Mississippi, with a population in 1890 of 184,297, received only 2,068 votes. One member of the present House, representing six counties in South Carolina, with a population in 1890 of 158,851, received only 1,765 votes, and one member representing thirteen counties in Louisiana, with a population of 208,802, received only 2,494 votes; and

Whereas it is a matter of common rumor that other States have, for reasons other than those specified in the Constitution of the United States, denied to some of their male inhabitants 21 years old and citizens of the United States the right to vote for members of Congress and Presidential electors, as well as executive and judicial officers of said States and members of the legislature thereof, and no reduction has been made in the representation of any State in this House because of such denial; and

Whereas the President of the United States has, by message, recommended "that the Congress, at its present session, apportion the representation among the several States as provided by the Constitution:" Therefore,

Resolved, SECTION 1. That the Committee on Census shall be, and is, authorized and directed, either by full committee or such subcommittee or subcommittees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to inquire, examine, and report in what States the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislatures thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such States 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, and the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in each such State.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not a privileged resolution; and if the Chair desires it, I wish to submit a remark or two on that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that the resolution is not privileged, and the Chair will hear the gentleman on the proposition he submits.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the question of the apportionment of members of the House has been held, I am aware, to be a privileged question, as I understand it, more than once. Ordinarily the question would not be privileged, as I understand the rules; but inasmuch as it is claimed, and the claim is undoubtedly true, that the Constitution requires the apportionment of members to be made at stated times by law, a resolution providing for such apportionment under the Constitution would be privileged under our rules. It is something that is required to be done by the Constitution itself, and hence is privileged, and necessarily so, under the rules of the House. But this is a different proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no other reason why a measure providing for the apportionment of members of the House is privileged under our rules. There is nothing mandatory in the Constitution, there is nothing that requires Congress to legislate along the lines that is proposed by the pending resolution, and it seems to me that there is nothing under the rules of the House and under the laws adopted under the Constitution and in pursuance of the Constitution which makes this proposition at all a matter of privilege under our rules. If, then, it is not privileged, and I hold it is not, it can not be called up at this stage of the proceedings of the House without unanimous consent, and will have to be referred to a committee of the House for consideration and report.

I make the point of order, therefore, that it is not privileged and that it must go to a committee as any other resolution providing for general legislation has to go.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this resolution not from any partisan or sectional standpoint, but from the standpoint of the Constitution itself, and I maintain that it presents a question of the highest possible privilege.

The mandate of the Constitution that Congress shall apportion representation among the various States of the Union has been held, as the learned gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has just stated, to involve a question of the highest privilege; and it was held in the Forty-seventh Congress (it seems to have been held frequently before, but in the Forty-seventh Congress a point of order was made and insisted upon, and a ruling was had upon the question—it was insisted that the previous rulings were bad precedents) that as apportionment affected a subsequent House, the bill then presented providing for such apportionment was not privileged in the House where it was offered.

That question was elaborately discussed by many members, and Speaker Keifer distinctly ruled that an apportionment bill was of the highest possible constitutional privilege. It is worth while to call the attention of the House and of the Chair to the reasons which he gave, which I shall do very briefly.

The Chair will state briefly that it is of opinion that the rules of the House are always subject to any constitutional provision that may be found. It may be true that under the rules, strictly speaking, this bill may not be in order. The Chair is, however, of opinion that the consideration of an apportionment bill by this Congress, fixing the representation in the next Congress under the last census, is one of high constitutional privilege.

He then referred to the duty of Congress to make the apportionment, and finally decided that in view of the constitutional mandate to apportion, the apportionment bill and matters relating to the apportionment of the next Congress become questions of the highest privilege in the present Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Was that decision appealed from?

Mr. OLMSTED. And although the question had been hotly debated, that ruling was not appealed from. And I desire to say that so eminent a Democrat as Mr. Randall took the same view. A special order had been fixed for that day, and other members were insisting upon the special order, but Mr. Randall declared that the motion to take up the apportionment bill raised a question of the highest possible constitutional privilege.

Now, differing from my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], I claim that the constitutional mandate in pursuance of which my resolution is offered is just as binding as the command found in the Constitution to apportion. It is found in the same article, in the same section, and in the same sentence. For where we find the language making it the duty of the House to apportion, saying—

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States, etc.

We also find:

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Now, as the constitutional mandate to apportion raises a question of such high privilege in this House, surely the mandate to reduce representation in proportion to the denial of suffrage to citizens 21 years old is of an equally high order.

The command is equally plain and is equally binding upon the consciences and acts of the members, not of some subsequent House, but of this House. And how shall the House act intelligently and perform its constitutional duty unless it is advised in what States the right of suffrage has been denied and to what extent and in what proportion it has been denied? It is in order to enable this House to perform its plain constitutional duty that I have offered this resolution authorizing and directing the Committee on the Census to inquire in what States and to what extent suffrage has been denied to male citizens 21 years of age for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crimes.

It is just as plainly in the line of the constitutional mandate as is the apportionment bill itself. Speaker Reed, in the Fifty-first Congress, when the question was again raised, ruled that matters relating to the apportionment were of the highest privilege, and his decision was not even appealed from. And the present honorable occupant of the chair ruled, during the last session, that matters relating to the census were privileged, because of the mandate of the Constitution upon this House to provide for the taking of the census.

This resolution is directly in the same line and is equally privileged upon that ground. As will be seen, the principal object of the resolution is to afford data for the performance by this Congress of its duties in the matter of apportionment. But if it were necessary I might go further and say that this resolution touches the dignity of the present House in another way; because, if these States, some of them or all of them, have reduced or restricted the right of suffrage without informing this House and without there having been any reduction in membership, there is to-day upon the floor of this House an unconstitutional representation from several States, an invasion of the rights and dignity of the House and of its membership. All that will be disclosed by the data called for by this resolution, although my object in offering it is to enable us to perform our duty under the Constitution.

Representation in the electoral college follows the representation in this House and rests upon it. It never was intended by the Constitution that in one State 20,000 men should elect seven members of Congress and nine members in the electoral college. The Constitution requires that apportionment shall be based, to a certain extent, upon the proportion and extent to which male citizens 21 years of age are permitted to have the right of suffrage.

Where that is denied you have this mandate of the Constitution, that in such State the basis of representation shall be reduced.

This affects or may affect the election of a President of the United States. It has been ruled in this House to be a question of the highest privilege that a member may arise in his seat and call for the impeachment of the President of the United States. Surely the election of a President is of equal importance with his impeachment. Once, in an attempt to impeach a United States marshal, touching a question of introducing a resolution for the purpose of ascertaining the facts that might impeach him, it has been held to be a matter of privilege. I could recount several other precedents; but it seems to me unnecessary to go further. In a case which my friend from Iowa will recollect, Mr. LACEY offered a resolution providing for the investigation of the alleged assassination of a man not a member of the House, but one who was merely claiming a seat here against the sitting member, and that resolution was held to affect the dignity and privileges and rights of the House, and to be privileged.

Here is one that may affect the right of ten or twenty members upon this floor directly and all members indirectly. But I am willing to rest it upon the single proposition that this resolution is offered in obedience to the mandate of the Constitution, to ascertain data to enable the House to perform its constitutional duty; and it is offered in part because yesterday when I inquired of the distinguished chairman of the committee what, if anything, had been done upon this subject, he stated that the committee was without sufficient data upon this subject, which seemed a very pertinent reply; and it is to enable the committee to obtain that data that this resolution is offered. I maintain that either as relating to apportionment or to the rights of individual members of the House and the dignity of the House itself this is a question of the highest possible privilege.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a word in reply to the argument of the gentleman. I conceded in what I had to say that a bill, or a joint resolution either, providing for the apportionment under the Constitution was a privileged matter under our rules. And the gentleman said that it had been so held more than once—once by Speaker Keifer, in the Forty-seventh Congress, and once by Speaker Reed, in the Fifty-first Congress. Now, these were propositions to do that which the Constitution required should be done; that is, to apportion or reapportion the members under the Constitution. This matter now presented is not a proposition to reduce the representation. The resolution merely recites certain alleged facts, and then follows a resolution of inquiry. It does not do what the Constitution provides, if it provides anything in the amendment which the gentleman referred to, the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. This resolution does not set out that there has been any denial of the right of suffrage by reason of any matter alleged in this amendment which authorizes a reduction of representation. It is simply a resolution of inquiry to ascertain facts, which the gentleman says may or may not be true. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this kind of a resolution does not come within the rule prescribed. It does not provide for an apportionment——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. The recital is that in certain States there had been a restriction of the right of suffrage without reduction of the representation, and the purpose is to find out to what extent that has been done in other States.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The resolution is just what I have said. It simply directs an inquiry to be made by the committee or subcommittee, and report the facts. Now, that is not a privileged question under the Constitution. I submit that no authority can be adduced which makes a resolution of inquiry such as this privileged. It can not be confounded with resolutions of inquiry, which, of course, the Chair very well understands are not of themselves privileged matter under our rules; that is, they are not privileged until they have been before a committee a week and the committee has failed to report them within the week. Then they are privileged, not because of what is in the resolution, but because the committee has failed to report the resolution. Then it becomes privileged under our rules, the resolution itself not being privileged. Now, I submit that there can be no authority adduced which makes a resolution such as this privileged.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, for information?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not know the gentleman had risen to ask a question. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAHON. How can we apportion the members, under the requirements of the Constitution, until we first ascertain the constitutional data upon which we are to make the apportionment; to ascertain the facts on which we are to make the apportionment? If it is true that a hundred thousand men have been disfranchised in a State under the Constitution, how shall we ascertain the facts so as to make the apportionment of members?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the facts. Let a resolution be referred, and the let committee report upon it; and if you want to pass legislation you can do it. But that is not a privileged question under our rules.

Mr. MAHON. That is what I am trying to get at. Why is one not as much privileged as the other?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Your question does not relate to the apportionment. It is competent for Congress to make an investigation. I am not saying that Congress should not make an investigation, but that it should be made under the rules.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I call the attention of the Chair to one further precedent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Tennessee has suggested that a resolution of inquiry can not be privileged. The Chair will find that this is not a mere question of inquiry. In the Forty-ninth Congress Mr. Wallace of Indiana offered a resolution only of inquiry instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire whether there had been an infringement by the treaty-making power of the constitutional right of the House to originate revenue measures, which was simply a resolution of inquiry, and yet, against the objection of Mr. Dingley of Maine, Speaker Carlisle ruled that it was a question which involves the constitutional powers of the House to originate such measures, and which has always been held to be a privileged question in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to pass upon the question. The matter seems to the Chair clearly settled by Article XIV, section 2, of the Constitution. The Clerk will read the section referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such States, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

The SPEAKER. This is a most important section and gravely touches the very vitals of the Republic as such, and makes mandatory upon Congress certain things that shall be done by Congress if certain conditions exist. This resolution alleges that certain things exist, expressly provided for by the section just read by the Clerk. The resolution and the preamble must be considered together. What is the object of the resolution providing for the investigation to be made by the Committee on the Census? It is to ascertain the truth of these facts and lay them before Congress so that proper action may be taken by this body.

The resolution is—

That the Committee on Census shall be, and is, authorized and directed, either by full committee or such subcommittee or subcommittees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to inquire, examine, and report in what States the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislatures thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such States 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, and the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in each such State.

Can any wiser course be suggested for carrying out the clear mandates of the Constitution than by the provision of this preamble and the resolution? The grave charges are made, and the resolution to carry out the proper investigation and treatment is before us. The whole matter, waiving all discussion of the rules of this House, comes under the higher rule than our rule, the constitutional rule which is here absolutely mandatory, and the Chair is unable to see why we should wander even among the precedents, which the Chair has looked over to some extent and which are all one way, when we have the plain language of the Constitution before us. The resolution is evidently carefully drawn in pursuance of the language of the Constitution. The Chair only hopes that he will never have occasion to settle a more difficult question than this, which seems to him so simple. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama raises the question of consideration.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will state his inquiry.

Mr. MADDOX. Is this resolution subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not until the House decides the question of consideration.

The question of consideration was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were 69 in the affirmative and 70 in the negative.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 83, answered "present" 10, not voting 182; as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5006) granting an increase of pension to John T. Comegys, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5211) to fix the compensation of district superintendents in the Life-Saving Service, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

PROTECTION OF NATIVE AND UNCIVILIZED RACES.

Mr. LODGE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations a resolution, and I am instructed to ask for its present consideration.

The resolution, which had been submitted by Mr. LODGE December 6, 1900, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this body the time has come when the principle, twice affirmed in international treaties for Central Africa, that native races should be protected against the destructive traffic in intoxicants should be extended to all uncivilized peoples by the enactment of such laws and the making of such treaties as will effectually prohibit the sale to aboriginal tribes and uncivilized races of firearms, opium, and intoxicating beverages.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SEWELL. Is the resolution reported from a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. LODGE. I stated that I reported it from the Committee on Foreign Relations and that I was instructed to ask for its present consideration. It is a resolution simply expressing the opinion of the Senate that it is desirable to extend the provisions as fast as may be of the international agreement in regard to Central Africa by laws and treaties, so as to prevent the sale of opium and intoxicating liquors to aboriginal races. It is merely an expression of opinion.

Mr. SEWELL. It would not apply to the Filipinos, I take it. You would not call them aboriginal?

Mr. LODGE. It is merely an expression of opinion.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to have the resolution lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. SEWELL. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 144) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration. It is very short and will only take a second.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than members of Congress, caused by the death of William Lyne Wilson, of Virginia, shall be filled by the appointment of George Gray, a resident of Delaware.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULBERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5380) for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Army who suffered loss on account of the cyclone at Galveston, Tex., September 8, 1900; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 5381) for the relief of the estate of John Rist, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5382) for the relief of the estate of William Parker, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KENNEY introduced a bill (S. 5383) granting a pension to Theopolis Goodwin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 5384) granting a pension to Andrew A. Mathews; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5385) granting a pension to Anna E. Best; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5386) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Alfred S. Cook, alias Alfred Seymour, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5387) referring the claim of the legal representatives of William T. Duvall, deceased, against the United States to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 5388) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of site and erection of a mint building thereon at Denver, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 5389) for the relief of Jackson College, of Columbia, Maury County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 5390) granting a pension to John R. Homer Scott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5391) to provide for a United States jail at Little Rock, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 146) for the printing as a Senate document of so much of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs as relates to the post exchange or canteen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 147) providing for the printing annually of the Report on Field Operations of the Division of Soils, Department of Agriculture; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment fixing the salaries of the superintendents in the Life-Saving Service, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,856.11 to pay balance due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., for supplies furnished to certain Indians, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,100 for paving Columbia road from Fourteenth street west, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1676) for the payment of certain claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ABRAM G. HOYT.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the bill (S. 1981) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN R. WILEY.

Mr. KENNEY. I move that the votes by which the bill (S. 5128) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin R. Wiley was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, that the bill may be indefinitely postponed. Since its passage through this body the claimant has died.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be postponed indefinitely.

CHARGES AGAINST COLONEL HEISTAND.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire upon what alleged facts the charges made by Maj. Erastus L. Hawkes against Colonel Heistand are based, and to report to the Senate whether there are any allegations which, in the opinion of that committee, should be investigated by the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think if the Senator will listen to the reading of the resolution, as it simply goes to that committee for the committee to determine what shall be done by it, he will see that its adoption would be the same as a reference.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not so understand it. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I shall renew the motion if the Senator withdraws it. I think if the Senator will listen to the resolution again he will adhere to his motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the resolution should not pass, but on grounds entirely distinct from those perhaps to which the Senator refers. I will make the motion.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that it puts the Senate of the United States in a very extraordinary position—this great body, representing 45 sovereign States and dealing with great national and international affairs. Now, without anything to show a large public interest, without anything to show any great matter of principle, there is a resolution proposing that a committee shall inquire whether John Smith properly charged John Jones. We do not know what the charges are, or who John Smith is, or who John Jones is. That is the whole of the resolution. I object to it. I do not object to its being referred to the committee. I renew the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to withdraw his motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I renewed it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in this connection. There are a number of statements in newspapers of charges being preferred by one man, who has been an Army officer heretofore, against another man, who is an Army officer—charges of a very grave character. Rumors of facts of a very grave character in connection with the matter have found their way into newspapers and are presented on all sides to Senators. The ex-Army officer has been removed from the public service, as the newspapers state, and, it is stated by one of the Secretaries, on account of his being guilty of some bad conduct. The rumors are that the other man was as guilty as he was in connection with those things. If it is true that the man who remains in the public service has been equally as guilty as the man who has been removed, the facts ought to be known, and if there has been any infamous conduct of that sort, it should be understood.

The resolution which I offer simply proposes to direct the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the facts and to determine whether, on the face of the papers, or whatever is presented to that committee, there is any ground for any investigation. Whether there is any truth in any of it I do not know, but I do believe that the charges made are of sufficient gravity to warrant their being looked into by a committee to determine whether there ought to be an investigation. I have no objection to the resolution taking the course suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOAR. My objection is to the form of the procedure. The Senator proposes that the committee shall inquire whether there is any truth in charges made by A against B. For one, I do not know what the charges are, or who A is, or who B is. I have never heard of the matter before, to my knowledge. I have heard something privately since the Senator's resolution was read. But it does seem to me that it should be a very grave and serious matter before the Senate of the United States unlimbers its heavy artillery, and that we should know whether it is a matter that should be settled by a suit before a justice of the peace, settled by a court, or by impeachment brought before the Senate by the House of Representatives, or settled by legislation, or in some other way. But the committee will have the whole matter before them if the resolution is referred. They will supply any defect in the form of the resolution, and will know what to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF ABRAHAM L. LAWSHE.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution, and I ask that it may be printed and lie over until to-morrow under the rule.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby expresses its condemnation of the refusal of the Secretary of War, under whatever influence, to send to the Senate copies of papers called for by its resolution of the 19th of December, 1900, requesting the Secretary of War to send to the Senate the report of Abraham L. Lawshe in relation to the receipts and expenditures in Cuba, as in violation of his official duty and subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government and of a good administration thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

REPORTS ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed of the Compilation of Reports of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate from 1789 to 1900, prepared under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as authorized by the act approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes," 500 copies, of which number 35 copies shall be for the use of the committee.

RESURVEY OF LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States is hereby requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 2955) entitled "An act providing for the resurvey of township numbered 8, of range numbered 30 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Frontier County, State of Nebraska," in order to correct an error whereby the bill has been enrolled as an act of the first instead of the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate copies of all instructions sent to the officers of the Government in the Philippines since May 1, 1898, and orders issued by officers of the Government in the Philippines in relation to the conduct of the war and in relation to the government of that country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is a very sweeping resolution. It covers a great many matters which have already been sent in. It would be useless labor to send them in again. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I think perhaps it would be proper to amend the resolution by providing that the President shall send all those papers not heretofore transmitted to the Senate, which would cover the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The information desired is for the purpose of giving the Senate a chance to determine whether a large army is necessary or not. The President says there is no war; that it closed some months ago. The Military Committee seem to disagree with the President. It is hard to tell what the chairman of that committee means by his statement, while the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] clearly states that there is a war of large proportions, requiring an army of not less than 60,000 men, and perhaps a hundred thousand, for an indefinite period.

Owing to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs and the President disagree as to what the facts are, it seems to me it would facilitate the passage of the Army bill for us to have possession of the official data upon the subject, and that we have a right to know and to judge for ourselves before we determine so great a question as the permanent enlargement of the Army of the United States to a hundred thousand men, for it is idle to pretend that the bill now under consideration for the enlargement of the Army does not make a permanent army of 100,000 men. No one pretends that it shall be less as far as its quota of officers is concerned. It can be less only as to its private soldiers and the corporals.

Therefore, as we have to consider the question whether the Army shall be increased from less than 30,000 to 100,000, and the reason given for the increase by the Committee on Military Affairs is that we are engaged in a war in the Philippines which the President says does not exist, it seems to me important that we should have this information.

I think it will facilitate very much the passage of the Army bill if it can be secured in as prompt a manner as possible. I have no faith in the Committee on the Philippines reporting the resolution, and I have a right to suspect that they will not do it, for the reason that last year, and whenever we have tried to get the facts in regard to the Philippines, the information has been denied. The resolutions referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations were never reported back to this body. We are in ignorance and the public is in ignorance as to the instructions given to our peace commissioners at Paris except such information as was given by the President in a campaign document during the last campaign; and we have a right to suppose that they were garbled extracts. Under the circumstances we have a right to this information and the whole of it, and yet it is denied to the American people and to the Senate of the United States.

Therefore I hope the resolution will be passed rather than referred to that graveyard of resolutions as to the facts of the miserable business in which we are engaged, the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I hope that the resolution will not be adopted. It would take some months of copying in the Philippines and copying here, and it would take a good month to send the manuscript over from Manila. Whether the object of the resolution be to delay the passage of the Army bill or not, it is very obviously the immediate effect, and the Senator who offers it, being quite an intelligent and experienced member and knowing precisely what the resolution will do, is liable to the legal doctrine that when a man knows what the effect of his action is to be he is held to be responsible or guilty as the case may be. If he should discharge a musket down a crowded street, the law takes it for granted that he intends to kill somebody. This is quite an analogous case. I move——

Mr. ALDRICH. There is a motion pending.

Mr. HAWLEY. To refer it to the committee?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope that action will be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO SISSETON AND WAHPETON INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of all recommendations, requests, and papers on file in relation to the payment of money belonging to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians to said Indians since November 6, 1900, and to inform the Senate whether he informed said Indians, or any of them, or any other person, previous to November 6 that he would make said payment after that date.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the resolution go over one day more. I understand that the Senator who introduced it is willing that it shall go over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what necessity, if any, exists for increasing the Army at this time; what are the conditions in the Philippines, and how many men are required there. The President is also requested to send to the Senate copies of all communications received from our officers in the Philippines showing the conditions in that country and the number of men required now and in the future.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I should like to know the purpose of the reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. I should like to know whether it is for the purpose of reporting it back, or for the purpose of keeping it there, or what is the purpose in referring it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is to be referred for the consideration of that committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. For the information of the committee, I should like to ask?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; for the consideration of the committee, in order that the committee may state to the Senate whether they think it a proper resolution to pass.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can I have any assurance from the Senator that the committee will meet at once and act upon it?

Mr. ALDRICH. The chairman of the committee is present. I have no doubt it will be acted upon within a reasonable time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the chairman if he can give any assurance of early action upon the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I intend to call a meeting of the committee to-morrow morning at about half past 10, and that paper, among many others will be laid before it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY O. MORSE.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 163) for the relief of Henry O. Morse.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Henry O. Morse, late of the United States ship Alleghany, and to issue to him a certificate of discharge from the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill was read through—the whole of it—what the House struck out, what the Senate inserted, etc., and I suppose it is now in order to begin where the House bill begins, on page 10, line 18, and act upon the amendments of the committee. Am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are in order. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the report of the committee on the bill be read. If there is more than one report, I want to have both read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota demands the reading of the report. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. HAWLEY December 20, 1900, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom said bill was referred, report it with sundry amendments and recommend that it do pass as thus amended.

By a law bearing the above title enacted March 2, 1899, the President was "authorized to maintain the Regular Army at a strength not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, to be distributed among the several branches of the service, including the Signal Corps, and raise a force of not more than 35,000 volunteers, to be recruited as he may determine from the country at large or from the localities where their services are needed."

Under the authority of this statute very nearly 100,000 men were brought into the field and organized, but the law provided "that the officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army should be mustered out of the military service, as provided in the act of April 22, 1898." But the act of March 2, 1899, proceeds to say:

"That each and every provision of said act shall continue in force until July 1, 1901, and on and after that date all the general staff and line officers appointed to the Army under this act shall be discharged and the numbers restored in each grade to those existing at the passage of said act."

It is also provided that such increased regular and volunteer force shall continue in service only during the necessity therefor and not later than July 1, 1901, "and the enlisted force of the line of the Army shall be reduced to the number as provided for by a law prior to April 1, 1898," excepting the addition to the artillery regiments.

Briefly, all the volunteers must be discharged and the entire Army reduced to about 29,000 unless some remedial legislation shall be enacted before the 1st of July, 1901.

It is impossible to suppose that any intelligent citizen would pretend that an army of 29,000 is sufficient to meet existing requirements. Sixty-nine thousand soldiers must be discharged before July 1, 1901. The work has necessarily commenced already. Invalid soldiers are brought home first. A ship is now on the way with its complement, and ships are to leave twice a month until all are brought home, except those who desire to remain in our island possessions as citizens.

If no legislation shall interfere, on the 30th of June the men who enlisted in the Regular Army for three years will have to be mustered out before their time.

To fail now to preserve the Army substantially at its present strength would be to plunge our present position into chaos and to let loose all shames and crimes.

The bill S. 4300, passed the Senate last session. The House in considering the bill this session struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted a bill with many changes.

Section 3 of the bill as it came from the House enacted that the regimental organization of the artillery arm of the United States Army is hereby discontinued, and that arm is constituted and designated the artillery corps. The Senate committee reports against this proposition, preferring to preserve the regiments, many of which have very glorious traditions.

Fixing the number of staff officers has been a trying task. The committee has not been able to comply with all the recommendations of the chiefs of departments, but endeavored to give them a sufficient working force.

An amendment not reported by the committee last session was inserted in Senate bill 4300 providing for a formidable veterinary corps.

The Senate committee proposes to strike out the section providing for such a corps, which was inserted in the House, and insert in lieu therefor section 16, which, in the judgment of cavalry officers and quartermasters, grants to the Army a sufficient number of veterinarians with sufficient rank and pay.

Care has been taken to give deserving officers of volunteers who are to be mustered out an opportunity for entering the Regular Army.

The committee hopes that very considerable useful forces may be enlisted in the Philippine Islands, and has authorized the President to enlist such troops when in his opinion the condition in the Philippine Islands justifies.

The committee respectfully invites the attention of the Senate to the following comparative statement of the officers of the staff corps and the officers of the line:

There has been a long-continued agitation in the public mind concerning the so-called "canteen" system in the Army. The true and legal title is the "post exchange," a thoroughly and carefully organized system intended to furnish the soldier a supply and selection of articles of food that he may vary his regular rations. It also furnishes articles of clothing, stationery, etc., and in the room containing these, newspapers of various classes.

The existing law and custom permit the sale of beer and light wine. The committee has amended the House provision on this subject, making the section read as follows:

"SEC. 34. The sale of or dealing in wine or any distilled spirits by any person in any post exchange or canteen or Army transport or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States is hereby prohibited. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect."

The committee invited and heard all who desired to speak upon this interesting subject. The post exchange, misnamed the "canteen," has been greatly misunderstood and misrepresented. The committee believes that the arguments and statistics, to which is given very liberal space, will justify the opinion that the post exchange is a great instrument of good and of great value in maintaining discipline and good order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that that which immediately follows is quite a long letter from the Adjutant-General of the Army, with statistics, etc. It is on our table here, and is part of the argument concerning the canteen or the post exchange, which we are having printed in full. It has already gone to press.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the reading of the letter of the Adjutant-General be dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] having requested that the report should be read, as he is now absent from the Senate Chamber, it seems to me it is not fair to that Senator to have the order changed in his absence. I therefore insist that the report shall be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects, and the reading will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 17, 1900.

SIR: Referring to the request of your committee for official information regarding the post exchange, popularly known as the "Army canteen," I have the honor to reply as follows:

The post exchange was established in 1889 as a substitute for the traders' store system, which the Department had determined to abolish. It was essentially a cooperative institution, the expense of which was met entirely by contributions from the enlisted men, without any assistance whatever from the Government, excepting permission to occupy a vacant building, and maintained entirely at their own expense.

Its features were: (a) A well-stocked general store in which such goods are kept as are usually required at military posts and were formerly supplied by the trader; (b) a well-kept lunch counter, where such articles as tea, coffee, cocoa, nonalcoholic drinks, soup, fish, sandwiches, pastries, etc., are always on sale; (c) reading and recreation rooms, supplied with books, periodicals, and other reading matter, paper and envelopes, where men can write letters to their friends; billiard and pool tables, bowling alley, and facilities for other proper indoor games, as well as apparatus for outdoor sports and exercises, such as cricket, football, baseball, tennis, etc.; (d) a well-equipped gymnasium, and, incidentally, (e) a room used for no other purpose in which the sale of beer and light wines was permitted whenever the commanding officer "is satisfied that giving to the troops the opportunity of obtaining such beverage within the post limits will prevent them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them."

No spirituous liquors, such as whisky, brandy, gin, and high wines, have ever been sold in the canteen, their sale being positively prohibited; the sale of beer limited to week days and must be consumed upon the premises; the practice of treating and every form of gambling absolutely forbidden. The sale of beer was authorized for two reasons. First, as above cited, to keep the men away from the drinking saloons and low dens of vice that fringe every large military post, and, second, that through the profits the soldier's ration could be supplemented by such extras as milk, eggs, butter, lard, ice, and such other articles regarded as indispensable by the poorest family in civil life, but which, for obvious reasons, are not a part of the Army ration. The establishment, in a few words, embodies the features of a cooperative store and an enlisted man's club.

Following the year 1889, the development of the exchange was gradual and always progressive. In the beginning a great many officers were opposed to it, but this opposition, as is shown by official records, during the four or five following years, almost entirely disappeared, so that by the beginning of the year 1895 there were exchanges at every military post, and the result of the experiment was so fully demonstrated that it was recognized everywhere as a most important feature of army administration. No complaints of any consequence were made against it, and every report from commanding officers and department commanders was highly commendatory.

The breaking out of the war with Spain, the sending of the Army into the field, and the raising of volunteer regiments developed unexpected and, perhaps, not unreasonable, conditions. It being impossible to carry into the field the store, the recreation room, the gymnasium, and such like sections of the exchange, coupled with the desirability of keeping the men away from the grogshops and saloons which followed the Army into the field, as well as the unfamiliarity of the volunteer troops with the system, necessarily confined the exchange to little more than a canteen, pure and simple, thus bringing the objectionable part of the exchange into prominence.

It is not of record that there was any abuse of the canteen privilege by any regiments of the Regular Army, but at some of the volunteer camps this abuse became so apparent as to create an opposition upon the part of temperance people and others having the interest of our soldiers at heart, and to these conditions, which lasted during the greater part of 1898, is to be attributed the strong opposition to the canteen, which culminated in the action of Congress of March 2, 1899, popularly known as the "anti-canteen amendment to the Army appropriation bill."

There are at the present time about 75 post exchanges within the limits of the United States which embody all the features above cited. Against these exchanges there has never been any special complaint, their operations being entirely satisfactory. They have resulted in driving away from the vicinity of the posts the saloons and dens of vice which formerly surrounded them, and by their profits they have enabled the soldier to supplement his ration with such extra articles as give him the best table fare accorded the soldiers of any nation in the world; and the abolition of the exchange, which would be the natural result from prohibiting the sale of beer, if we are to judge from the practically unanimous sentiment of the Army, would prove a most serious detriment, not only to military discipline, but to the well-being and contentment of the enlisted men.

About a year ago, for the purpose of informing the Secretary of War as to the views of the Army on the subject, a very careful canvass was made. Every commanding officer of regiments, battalions, troops, batteries, and companies, and the noncommissioned officers of longest service, were called upon for their opinions. The opinions of general officers were not called for, for the reason that their views on the question were already of record. The views of staff officers were not required, for the reason that very few of them were serving with troops; nor of lieutenants, for the reason that the greater number of them had entered the service since the exchange system was introduced, and obviously had no knowledge of earlier conditions.

The result of this canvass, together with the information already in possession of the Department, shows that the advocates and supporters of the canteen system embraced every general officer except two, every colonel of cavalry, every colonel of artillery, every colonel of infantry but one, 504 of the 516 commanding officers of organizations, and fully 95 per cent of the noncommissioned officers of oldest service. The practical unanimity of sentiment was so apparent as to leave no room whatever for doubt. It developed the fact that 908 commanding officers and noncommissioned officers out of the 1,019, whose opinions were received, said that it has improved the discipline of the Army; 739 that it has decreased desertion; 825 that it has lessened the number of trials by court-martial for petty offenses; 909 that it has lessened drunkenness; 980 that the selling of beer at the post prevents the men from going outside to procure whisky and other strong intoxicants.

It was further developed by a careful investigation made by Assistant Surgeon Munson, U. S. A., that the effect of the canteen system upon the sick rate has been so marked as to have attracted the attention of medical experts; that the percentage of cases of hospital treatment for alcoholism and its direct results, which for the ten years preceding the introduction of the canteen system, averaged 64.28 per thousand, had gradually decreased during the ten years following the introduction of the canteen to 44, 46, 44, 44, 41, 37, 34, 32, 31, 30; that cases of delirium tremens had been reduced 31 per cent, and that the cases of insanity due to intoxicants had been reduced 31.7 per cent.

In the face of this testimony of the men who are in direct contact with the system, and of expert investigation, it is safe to presume that the prohibition of the sale of beer in the post exchange means an increase of whisky drinking and drunkenness, and the consequent necessity for medical treatment, an increase of the horrors of delirium tremens and insanity, an increased number of courts-martial and punishments, and of desertion, to the scandal of the service, no less than a decrease in discipline, health, and morals, and the consequent diminution of contentment, self-esteem, and self-reliance upon the part of the enlisted men, to say nothing about its effects on the surrounding communities.

There remains to be considered the new conditions that have grown out of the occupation by the United States of lands in tropical countries where native customs and climatic conditions have developed new and unexpected problems. Reports from the Philippine Islands, where our troops are scattered at something over 400 stations, at small towns and villages, where it is quite impossible to purchase anything beyond the ordinary necessities of life, indicate that the post exchange has become an absolute necessity. Moreover that the sale of beer in these exchanges has prevented the soldiers from drinking the vile native concoctions known as "anisado," "bino," or "vino," and "tuba," which in the early days of our occupation presented a very serious problem to the military authorities. Extracts from a few of these reports received by recent mails accompany this letter.

Similar reports have been received from Cuba, where the conditions are very much like those in the Philippine Islands, several officers, including General Lee, having reported that drunkenness has almost entirely disappeared since the sale of beer has been permitted in their commands. In the Annual Report of the Adjutant-General of the Army for 1900, page 25, there are cited reports from the chief surgeon at Santiago de Cuba to the effect that owing to the outbreak of yellow fever in 1899 canteens were discontinued at many posts in that section, but that alcoholism and intestinal troubles increased to an alarming extent, the latter almost fourfold at some posts, and as the increase could not be traced to the food and water the surgeons attributed it to rum, which is easily procured at very slight cost in that section. The canteens were then opened and the subsidence of these intestinal troubles was as remarkable as their rise. In one post in one month the intestinal troubles decreased 80 per cent.

There is also cited a report of the inspector-general of the Department of Porto Rico to a similar effect. These officers conclude that to close the canteen in Cuba and Porto Rico without first closing all possible avenues for the procuring of rum within a radius of 10 miles would be sanitary suicide, and "from practical observations are led to the conclusion that the closing of the post canteen in Cuba and Porto Rico would be an unjustifiable as well as a dangerous experiment."

In the face of all this testimony to the beneficent influence of the canteen as an aid to morality, health, and discipline it may be easily understood why the Army views with a feeling of dismay any action of Congress looking to its abolition. This overwhelming majority of officers, who are responsible to the Government for the lives and well being of their men and dependable upon their good conduct, contentment, and efficiency for the correct performance of the duties enjoined upon them, reasonably feel that they are better judges of what is best for their men than outsiders, who, however praiseworthy their motives in the abstract, can have no possible knowledge of the concrete.

Enlisted men who see the combined efforts of their officers for their betterment and contentment ineffectual and their wishes ignored become discontented and refuse to reenlist. Already are there indications that men proposing to enter the Army are likely to be deterred from enlisting when informed that their personal liberty is to be still further restricted, and that the table fare is to be limited to the ration, pure and simple. For these reasons this Department indulges the hope that your committee may recommend that the canteen system, as it now exists, be not disturbed, but left to the good judgment of the officers who are responsible for the discipline, efficiency, and contentment of the men they command.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
Chairman Military Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether this is all the report there is from the Senate committee on the subject?

Mr. HAWLEY. Directly following what has been read at the desk are extracts from communications on the subject of the post exchange. They are a part of the report. There are four pages more, containing perhaps twenty or thirty extracts and some conversations between members of the committee and officers of the Army and others, which are really part of the report. In addition, there are two pamphlets containing 128 pages of evidence presented to the committee. We heard everybody who desired to be heard. There were speeches, letters, and all that sort of thing. They are printed in two separate documents, entitled "Hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs," which are a part of the report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. If the chairman of the committee will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that it might be wise to pass over all contested amendments and propositions in the bill likely to lead to discussion, to the end that the formal amendments may be first disposed of. I can see no objection to that proceeding, and I think it would tend to expedite the work upon the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator means unobjected amendments.

Mr. CARTER. Let the unobjected amendments be first disposed of. If the chairman has no objection, I will ask unanimous consent that we proceed to first dispose of unobjected amendments to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Would that apply to the whole bill, and prevent discussion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of amendments which are not objected to. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I will say that the proposition will not in any way abridge the right of discussion of the whole bill and amendments; but there are certain amendments which are verbal and entirely unobjectionable. They constitute no basis for discussion, and it would be well to have the bill perfected and the discussion reduced to the contested points, if possible. I trust the Senator from South Dakota will withdraw his objection, to the end that that mode of procedure may obtain.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not withdraw my objection, for the reason that I have tried to secure information as to why the Army should be enlarged, and it is refused. I tried to get it from the reading of the report of the committee, but that contains nothing. It simply relates to the Army canteen, and contains some incoherent statements with regard to the increase of the Army without a reason, without an argument, without an excuse of any sort. From some source I propose to have this information, if it can be had. If the committee will not furnish it, and the Senate refuses to pass resolutions of inquiry seeking it, then we shall have to take time to try to find it as best we can.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the Senator was out of the Chamber when the first part of the report was read. The first two pages of the report contain carefully condensed statements of the reasons for these enlistments and the necessities of the service. I presume he did not hear that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. All we find is this:

To fail now to preserve the Army substantially at its present strength would be to plunge our present position into chaos and to let loose all shames and crimes.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is part of the report, and the judgment of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And for that reason we need an Army of 100,000 men!

Mr. HAWLEY. The report has been read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suppose there must be another report to justify the committee in bringing in a bill here asking for an increase of 69,000 men.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will allow me one moment; I hope he will permit an interruption?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from South Dakota does not correctly state the case. There is really no proposition to increase the Army here. The Army at present is 100,000 men. It consists of 65,000 authorized regulars and 25,000 volunteers. It is true that it is but a temporary force, but it is so obvious to the most casual observer in the country, to everyone reading the daily papers, to everyone having access to the reports of the department commanders, the Secretary of War, and the messages of the President of the United States, that a condition exists which can not be fully described in any ordinary report of limited scope: that a report attempting to describe the conditions with which this bill proposes to deal would constitute a reflection not only upon the intelligence of Senators, but upon the general intelligence of the people of the country at large. There is no doubt whatever that the present force of 100,000 men is scarcely an adequate force. It has been said that 79,000 men were engaged in the Philippines at one time. Certain troops are engaged in Porto Rico; other troops in Hawaii; some troops in Cuba; and it is well known to the Senator from South Dakota that troops have been so far withdrawn from the United States as to leave public property at established posts, and guns connected with our coast defense, without proper care or attention. In the State of South Dakota, for instance, I doubt if there is an adequate number of troops at any one of the military posts there to preserve order in case of an Indian outbreak; and certainly scarcely enough in the State of Montana at one military post to take care of the public property.

If any criticism can be offered at all to the number proposed for the Army in this bill, the criticism might well obtain that the number provided is inadequate, and that statement, I think, is but the natural result of two years' experience and ordinary observation, which is as open to the Senator from South Dakota, with his clear sense of public duty, as to any other person in this Chamber. A report can not be made to cover all of the facts and conditions stated in the report of the Secretary of War and the reports of the general commanding in the Philippines and of his subordinate officers. I think the report would make a volume so large that the Senator would be discouraged in being charged with reading it in order to properly inform himself of the conditions.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

Yesterday in his remarks, if I remember correctly, he said that it was necessary to have a large force in the Philippines to preserve law and order and to uphold the dignity of the American arms and the American flag. In this discussion it seems to me that the starting point is this: What is the intent of the Administration in regard to the Philippines? Is it the intention of the present Administration to take the Philippines and annex them permanently, against the wishes of the people, by force and arms? If that be the intention, there is no question that a large army is necessary, and will be necessary for years to come.

When this matter was first taken up we were assured by Administration Senators that 5,000 men in six weeks would restore tranquillity and make peace in the Philippines. Two campaigns have been fought in the Philippines, and at every stage of the war we have been assured that in a week or two there would be complete peace; and yet, notwithstanding the fact that the President in his message assures us that law and order are restored, the Military Committee comes here and tells us that it is necessary to keep 76,000 men in the Philippines now. For what reason? Why, sir, because those people can not be quelled by American arms in the manner that you are undertaking. And, sir, it was said before the Presidential election that the only thing necessary further was that the present Administration should receive an indorsement by the people; that the Filipinos would then lay down their arms. Have they done so? No. The revolution there, the rebellion, the insurrection, call it what you may, is worse today than it was before the Presidential election.

Sir, I wish to put the question to the Senator from Montana, what is the purpose of the Administration? Is it the purpose to take these islands by force of arms and deprive the inhabitants of the Philippines of the right of self-government? Then I for one am opposed to the increase of the Army for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Army is not increased. It now stands, nominally, at least, at about a hundred thousand; really, I think, about 98,000; and the machinery is all ready for the reduction of it. When in the judgment of the President of the United States and the very able officers under him, upon the obvious facts as they will be laid before us by the press and by the current reports of officers, there is no serious war going on, nothing but brigandage and guerrilla warfare, then we shall reduce the Army. It will reduce itself then. It will be necessary only to stop recruiting to reduce it at quite a rapid rate.

Mr. CARTER. With the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, in whose time I seem to be speaking——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield the floor to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I will endeavor to answer the question of the Senator from Maryland, which is pretty well drawn out, I must confess.

Mr. WELLINGTON. The Senator from Maryland begs pardon, but he has patterned after older associates.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Montana, possibly.

Mr. President, the pith and point of the question presented by the Senator from Maryland is this: The Administration must here and now, to satisfy his mind, declare its intention with reference to the future policy of this Government in the Philippine Islands. The Senator does not vouchsafe the information as to whether, that policy being declared, he would support the bill, but he thinks that in order to act intelligently upon the subject some pointed declaration should be made. The Senator can consult the record made by Congress for an answer to his question.

The President of the United States has no right to elect as to what he will do in the Philippine Islands. I undertook briefly yesterday afternoon to outline the history of the events leading up to the present situation. In the first instance, this body, by a two-thirds vote, both Houses subsequently by a majority vote, ratified a treaty whereby the Philippine Islands were ceded to the United States, and subsequently appropriated the money in conformity with the terms of that treaty to make the payment to Spain of $20,000,000. That was not the action of the Administration, but the action of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the law-making and treaty-ratifying power of the Government. The moment the treaty of peace was ratified, that moment, Mr. President, it became the supreme law of this land, and had the President of the United States at any time, or should he at any time in the future, relinquish the sovereignty of the Government over the Philippines when possessed of an authority to maintain that sovereignty, he would lay himself open to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors. He has as much right and authority to withdraw the forces of the United States and to surrender the sovereignty over Alaska to-night as he has over the island of Luzon.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Has he not already surrendered the sovereignty over one part of Alaska, if I may ask the question?

Mr. CARTER. That was in the course of an ordinary proceeding relative to a disputed boundary; and with reference to any cession or surrender at that point this body will finally be called upon to act, and the action of the President of the United States in the premises will only be tentative until there is a final and full disposition.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a modus vivendi.

Mr. CARTER. That was a modus vivendi—a mere temporary arrangement to prevent conflicts between citizens at the disputed point on the boundary.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Is it not true that under this modus vivendi our lines have been moved, the British constabulary have taken authority, have raised the British flag, and American citizens are now under English law there? That is true. That is the fact, and it is well known.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that is the alleged fact. I do not wish to be drawn into a discussion of the Alaskan boundary question. Certain wording of the treaty of cession, whereby the Territory of Alaska was ceded to the United States, was considered ambiguous and uncertain. The contention of the British Government did not agree with the claims of the United States. The country suddenly settled up along the disputed line of demarcation between the territory of the United States and the territory of Great Britain. For the purpose of avoiding bloodshed and unnecessary conflict between citizens of the respective Governments, the President, not making a treaty, but by commission, arranged a modus vivendi or temporary contract, not to be binding upon either party when the final adjustment should obtain. That is all there is to the Alaskan boundary matter as it at present stands. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] is familiar with the conditions of that temporary arrangement. It does not constitute the surrender of the sovereignty of the United States permanently over a foot of that territory. It is one course of proceeding that has obtained under like conditions very frequently heretofore.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator yield for just one moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, who seems to have disappeared.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Is it not true that Alaska was purchased from Russia and that our title was Russia's title? And is it not further true that the line of demarcation between Russian Alaska and the British possessions was marked by stones at different points that had been there for over half a century and perhaps over a century? And yet notwithstanding that the Administration has surrendered this territory which belonged to Russia beyond dispute and became American territory by the cession of Alaska to this country. It surrendered that territory under the modus vivendi, and the British have taken possession of it and are to-day controlling it by British constabulary. That is the fact. And American citizens have been deprived of American rights there.

Now, then, if the President should be impeached for surrendering in the Philippines American rights that never existed, then, sir, I contend that he is liable to the same impeachment for surrendering American territory that belonged to us beyond dispute. You say it has not been finally done. Why have the British taken possession? They hold it to-day; and I venture to say that unless there is a revolution or an uprising of sentiment in this country they will never return it to America.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator now permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. If I, for the purposes of the argument, admit his premise, to wit, if the President has surrendered some of our territory to Great Britain, does he approve of that act?

Mr. WELLINGTON. I do not.

Mr. CARTER. If he does not approve of the surrender of territory in Alaska by the President, would he approve of the surrender of territory in the Philippines by the President?

Mr. WELLINGTON. It is quite a different matter entirely, because I happen to know that it was not the intention of the Administration under the treaty of Paris to acquire permanently the Philippine Islands, and I do not think that treaty was adopted with that intention. I do not think that the Philippine territory can be compared to the Alaskan difficulty. I think it is quite another matter.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from South Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. CARTER. We all yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator speaks of the intention of the Administration in the acquisition of the Philippines. Is it the Senator's understanding that the Administration or Congress disposes of territory of the United States when once acquired?

Mr. WELLINGTON. The Senator's understanding would be that Congress would control it, but the Senator's understanding is that Congress has done nothing toward controlling it, and that the Executive power has controlled that territory from the time it was acquired.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but the Senator spoke about the intention of the Administration, as I understand it, as to whether the ownership of the Philippines should be temporary or permanent.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. My question to the Senator is this: Whether it is his notion that the Administration can determine the duration of the tenure, under the treaty, of territory acquired by the United States. Is not that solely for Congress to determine?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Has it not resolved itself of late to the simple question of what the Executive wants? Does he not seem to have the power of controlling action, or really of not permitting action in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. In what respect?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Have you been able to have a declaration of what is the intention of Congress or of the President with respect to the Philippines?

Mr. SPOONER. The Congress would not undertake probably to declare the intention of the President, any more than the President would undertake to declare the intention of Congress. Congress can manifest its intention only by its legislative action under the Constitution, and the President's intention is confined to executive acts which under the Constitution he has a right to perform. The President has notified Congress, not only in the message he sent over a year ago, but in his last message, of his purpose.

> I stated my purpose, until the Congress shall have made the formal expression of its will—
> That is for the Congress to do, and not the President—
> to use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats, placing, to that end, at the disposal of the Army and Navy all the means which the liberality of the Congress and the people have provided.

Now, can the Senator conceive of a place—of a spot acquired by the United States under the treaty, belonging to the United States under the Constitution—in which it is not the duty of the President to enforce the sovereignty of the United States and to resist lawlessness against the United States or its sovereignty?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Does the Senator pretend to say that the Philippines now are and have been fully acquired?

Mr. SPOONER. I have said nothing of the kind, except to this extent, that in my judgment the Philippine Archipelago belongs to the United States.

Mr. WELLINGTON. There is where we differ—right at that point. I do not believe that it does belong to the United States for purposes of permanent acquisition.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator vote to pay for it $20,000,000?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Yes, the Senator voted to do that; but he voted under a misapprehension and under misinformation by the Administration itself.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator ought not to be governed in his vote to appropriate money by his understanding of what the President means to do. The Senator ought to have known, and undoubtedly did know, that the Government, by the ratification of the treaty, followed by the exchange of ratifications, acquired the territory, and the Senator voted for the appropriation, which the treaty provided, of $20,000,000 to be paid to Spain.

Mr. PETTIGREW. How did we get title?

Mr. SPOONER. By cession.

Mr. CARTER. Precisely as in the case of Alaska from Russia.

Mr. WELLINGTON. There is the trouble; we have not possession. You are now asking for 76,000 men to help you gain possession. You have not possession of those islands, and you can not get it even with the increase of the Army that you now propose.

Mr. CARTER. Somebody must be in possession of the Philippine Islands, and the United States comes a little nearer being in possession than any other Government of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not much.

Mr. CARTER. The digression with reference to the Alaskan matter ought not to divert our attention from the purposes of this bill. As suggested, the provision relative to Alaska was entirely temporary. But the Senator from Maryland readily concedes that if the President happens to be, as he asserts, derelict in duty with reference to the Alaskan Territory, then and in that event the President ought to be arraigned for his failure to execute the law and to protect the property of the United States. If that be true with reference to Alaska, it is pertinent to inquire wherein the Philippine situation differs from the Territory of Alaska. Alaska was ceded by Russia to the United States by a treaty of cession. The amount to be paid was stipulated in the treaty. The Senate in the first instance ratified the treaty and thereafter the two Houses of Congress appropriated the necessary money to make payment in conformity with its terms. In the Philippine situation Spain ceded sovereignty to the United States over the Philippine Archipelago. The Senate of the United States ratified the treaty of cession. Thereafter both Houses of Congress united in making an appropriation to make payment of the amount stipulated in the treaty as the purchase price. I can not perceive any difference in these two matters in principle or in fact.

Further answering the Senator, I say that the manifest purpose of the Administration must be drawn from the obligations of the Administration and its action under its obligation. There has not been a time since the moment that treaty was ratified and sovereignty obtained when it was not the duty of the President of the United States to maintain the sovereignty thus ceded and acquired.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me? For what other purpose did we give him the army which is now there?

Mr. CARTER. I can not conceive what we made the large appropriation for in support of the Army and the Navy. It was known to Congress full well that a large portion of the fleet of gunboats and cruisers and battle ships were in Asiatic waters patrolling the seas round about the Philippine Islands, assisting in regulating intercourse between the islands and in preventing goods contraband of war from entering upon those islands or being shipped there. It was known that transports were engaged day in and day out, week in and week out, in shipping supplies and troops to sustain and reenforce the army in the Philippines.

In the face of this knowledge, known of all men, Congress has without hesitation made the necessary appropriations to maintain sovereignty, keep the Army in its place, and keep the Navy supplied in those waters. This was the plain duty of the President, and his action in performing the duty has been ratified by Congress in the most clear and explicit manner. What, then, I pray, becomes of the question, What is the intention of the Administration? The intention of the Administration is to protect the property of the United States, to execute the laws of the United States, and to spend the money provided by Congress in the common defense and for the protection of the property of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that there are two phases of this proposition. One is, Are we to have an Army of 100,000 men in time of peace? The other is, How many men do we need now in this temporary force that we supposed we had? It seems to me we might discuss these questions without dragging in all the outside questions.

What I complain of with respect to the committee is that they come here with a bill that is not to meet the present exigency. It is a system to be put upon the people of the United States that will last probably as long as the Government lasts. Especially is that true if we need the Army for the reason suggested yesterday by the chairman, a reason he gave that has no possible connection with the present difficulty in the Philippine Islands.

It is possible that our condition in the Asiatic seas is such that we will always want a great army there. If it is, the committee should have come here and presented the case to us upon that theory. On the contrary, the profession from everybody is that the condition over there is temporary and will be disposed of in a short time. We hope so, at least.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] gets into heroics and becomes excited and charges that somebody wants the President of the United States to do that which he says he can not do without being liable to impeachment. Nobody asked that the President of the United States withdraw the Army from the Philippine Islands. Every proposition to give him power to put down what you call the rebellion has met with the approval of Congress. When we speak of the Administration, for myself, I do not speak of the President. I understand the Administration of this country consists at the present time of Congress—the Senate and the House—and the Executive. The Administration is now, I think unfortunately for the country, in the hands of the Republican party. When we speak of the policy of the Republican Administration we speak of the policy of the two Houses of Congress and the President. We have a right to ask before we pass this bill what is the policy of the Administration, not the President, but the Senate, as dominated and controlled by the Republicans, the House of Representatives, as dominated and controlled by the Republican majority, and the Executive. What is to be the policy? Are you to attempt to maintain a government there without the consent of those people? If you are, you need not talk about 100,000 men. You will want 200,000 men. You will want them for one hundred years, I fear, if their future shall be in consonance with their history.

Mr. President, we are told that we have 76,000 soldiers there now. I think that perhaps is exaggerated. We have not so many. Some have gone to China. But we have probably not less than 65,000 or 70,000 soldiers there now, and we do not maintain there now the peace and order that we are talking about. Not long since a Regular Army officer returning from there—I think about six months ago—said to me that 200,000 men will be required there. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] says we have 420 stations or posts. If we put 200 men at a post—and surely no one would expect us to put less than that number—you will need 90,000 men; and if you put 300, which would be a small force, you would need more men than you provide for the whole Army. This bill is not to meet an emergency, the existing condition over there. It is to put upon this country an army, a perpetual army, of 98,000 men and over.

I think when you come to discuss the question here you ought to discuss it fairly, without the usual attributes of a political campaign. Let us be frank. The Senator from Montana says and the chairman says that we are not increasing the Army. Technically that may be true, but everybody knows that it is not true in the ordinary sense. You are increasing the Army. Your present Army is a temporary Army of 100,000 men. It expires by force of law in a few months. I want to challenge now what was said here yesterday by the chairman, that the party in power was compelled to limit the existence of this Army until the 1st of July. You were given carte blanche. You were told on this floor that any number and for any time you wanted you could have; and you know it. If you had said you wanted them for five years, you could have had it. You can have it now. You can pass a bill here within forty-eight hours for this emergency that will give you a hundred or a hundred and twenty-five or two hundred thousand men, and you may keep them as long as the war there lasts. You are making a pretense of the condition there to put upon the people of this country 100,000 men when peace shall come, if peace ever comes over there.

I believe that this question is big enough and we are concerned in it enough to have a fair debate upon it. We ought to have had a report from the committee that proposes such a radical departure from what has been the policy of this country since its organization. We have not got it. It is not here. Look at it, Mr. President. What is the great question in this report? The canteen question. Whether we shall sell beer to the soldiers of our Army or whether we shall not. The chairman tells us he has the evidence taken before his committee. Here [exhibiting] is the evidence, and, so far as I know, it is all there is of it. It deals not at all with the question, What shall be the strength of the Army? It deals with the canteen question and the reorganization of the Army. It does not deal with the greater question whether we are to add $75,000,000 a year for all time to the expense of the Army.

I think we are entitled to all the evidence which has not been reported to the Senate and has not been printed. I got, by the courtesy of the clerk of the committee, a copy of the report of the hearings, and to me, as a civilian, it is of little value.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. We are limited in printing for the use of the committee, I believe, to 50 copies. We begged for some more and got them printed, perhaps in disobedience to orders, and now we have passed a resolution for 15,000.

Mr. TELLER. That is true; but if the 15,000 are to be of value, they should have been here now. We are to pass upon this question which is to cost this country millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, and, what is of more consequence, Mr. President, is a departure from the policy of this country for one hundred years and more, in fact ever since it was a nation, that the fighting force of this people shall be the volunteer and not the regular.

Mr. President, our friends who are in control can not get away from the serious character of this undertaking by saying that there is a war in the Philippine Islands. The President says that for many years you will need probably from 45,000 to 60,000 men there. You have more than that number now, and you have not begun to get control of anything but an inconsiderable portion of those great islands.

I have not agreed with everybody who has been in fear of imperialism. I said two years ago last month in the Senate that there would not be any imperialism there, for the American people would not allow it. Since that I have seen in those islands an imperial government that has had no equal on the face of the earth, an imperial government that has not a counterpart anywhere under the heavens, an imperial government with five men, and five men only, strangers to the language, strangers to the country, unacquainted with the interests of the people, sitting there and administering government, taking the money of the people and appropriating it without their consent, ignoring the people entirely.

Mr. President, the Czar of Russia in an absolute czar. He has a counsel of 60 men who sit with him and consider public affairs, but the 60 men are Russians. They are people of that country. They have their sympathies and their ambitions for Russia. These men in the Philippine Islands are strangers. Under the military law they have a right there undoubtedly, but under God's law, which is higher than that, they have no place there at all.

And so I take back what I said two years ago. Imperialism has come; it is there in its worst form, and what I want to know, like the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], is, What are you going to do now? Are you going to keep up this imperialistic government? Are you going to continue to govern 12,000,000 people contrary to their wish, without a voice, without being heard, when your chief actor over there, General MacArthur, tells you that the people are a unit against this administration, when every Filipino in Europe to-day, and there are thousands of them, is against our government over there?

I say to the gentlemen who are so ready to charge us with a desire to withdraw the Army and dishonor the flag that it does not involve that when we demand that you give to those people a government of their own. General Otis said to the President of the United States: "These people want conditional independence." There has never been a proposition from any Filipino authority anywhere that we should withdraw our Army and leave them unprotected. They have said: "We want your protection; we want you to keep the rest of the world off of us." Is that inconsistent with giving them a government of their own?

What did we say we would do for Cuba? We said we would leave the people to govern that island. Does anybody suppose that we are going to leave them the prey of any other nation? We will apply the Monroe doctrine to them. And what the Filipino asked was that we should apply the Monroe doctrine to them over there in the Asiatic Sea. That is what we ought to have given them. That is what I, on this floor, said two years ago last month we were in honor bound before the world to give them. When we said what we said with reference to Cuba, we said practically to the world, "This is not a war of aggression; it is a war in the interest of liberty and of humanity and of good government." We said to all the world, "It is not a war of aggrandizement; it is not a war of acquisition; we are not going into it for a profit; we are going into it for the greatest good to those people."

How stand we to-day, Mr. President, with a war on our hands, and no effort made for two years nearly to compose it? Nearly two years ago I said in this body it is not beneath the dignity of this great nation to call about our authority over there the leading men of that rebellion, if you choose so to call it, to confer with them and say to them, "We will give to you what we pledged the world we would give to Cuba." I repeat, we are in morals bound to give it to every man we took from under the Spanish flag after we made that declaration.

Now, Mr. President, that brings me back to the Army bill itself. I want to drop, for the time being, the Philippine question, because there is no reason why it should be connected with this measure. Then I want the chairman of this committee, or some Senator who defends the bill, to tell me what you want an Army of 100,000 men for in time of peace in the United States. Do you want it to meet foreign foes? If you do, you will want a million. Do you want to put down internecine struggles? They do not exist and they can not exist in our system of government. It is the State that must do that, and the Government only does it when the revolution gets too big for the State. Have not 30,000 men been enough for us in the past? Will some one here get up and tell us why we want this great Army? Will the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who has been at the head of the War Department of this country, tell us what is the exigency that demands now that we should have 100,000 men? If he repeats it is for the Filipinos, I want to tell him that his Army is not big enough for that: but if he wants 200,000 men, with a limit as to time, he can get them.

Nobody wants to deprive the Administration of the power to put down that so-called rebellion if they have the ability to do so, but, Mr. President, I believe you can compose affairs in that country by a simple declaration, made in a proper manner by the House and the Senate and signed by the President, that you will apply the fourth resolution of the Cuban resolutions to them, as you have got to apply it to Cuba, whether you want to or whether you do not.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the House and Senate do not pass such a resolution as that suggested by the Senator, is he then in favor of continuing the war of subjection in the Philippines?

Mr. TELLER. I believe I should answer that as old Abraham Lincoln did. He said he did not believe in the Mexican war; he did not believe it was a righteous or a just war; and yet he voted, and was always ready to vote, as a member of Congress, for such forces as the Government insisted that it needed. So as long as our flag flies there and the Administration of this country says it should remain there, I have no doubt, reluctant as I may be, I shall doubtless vote to maintain our armies in the field. If that is illogical, it is illogical because there does not seem to be any better way out of it.

Mr. President, I do not want to discuss the Philippine question very much. It is a distressing question. I said in December, 1898, the question whether we would hold them had passed the point of controversy. When Dewey's guns thundered in that harbor the Spanish flag went down and ours went up. Every man in this country knew that it meant the sovereignty of the United States, for the time being, at least, over those islands. I said two years ago, "The question is now, what are we going to do with those people." That is the question. Are we going to deny to them self-government? Are we going to continue this absolutism? The word "imperialism" is not as broad as absolutism. You might have an imperial government and have some degree of participation and liberty, but you have an absolute government, with five men sitting there, providing legislation, judicial determination, executive acts, with no responsibility to the 12,000,000 people whom they are governing. The President of the United States has said we need not be afraid of imperialism; that it would not come. Mr. President, if it can ever come in a worse shape than it exists now, you have got to increase the ability of the human mind for absolutism.

Mr. President, I did not intend when I got up to discuss the bill in its details. I am going to do that later. I got up simply to say that I wanted a Senator like the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to understand that he can not darken counsel by charging that we want to do what we have never proposed to do, and he can not darken counsel here by insisting that this is an attack upon the President of the United States. If it is an attack upon anybody, it is an attack upon the administration of the Government, not on any individual member, but on the responsible power.

I hope the time has not come when a Senator in this body will not be free to speak on a question involving so much; when, on a question touching directly the interest of 12,000,000 people and indirectly touching the interest of 80,000,000 more, he will not be allowed to discuss here these questions, not in the character of the political forum, but in accordance with the high character which ought to prevail in the discussions in the Senate.

I have not attempted at any time to make political capital out of this unfortunate condition. I regret the condition more than anything that has occurred since I have been in public life. Nothing can compare with it in seriousness except the great rebellion of 1861, and with that came some advantages. With that came a condition that put the whole people of the United States on a harmonious plane and made us homogeneous in interest; but out of this nothing can come that is good.

Trade can never come to us in the condition that we are now in. Shooting those men, outraging them, can never bring them in a relation to us where their trade will be beneficial to us. But if their trade was worth all the trade of the world, it would not compensate for what we are likely to suffer and what we are likely to bear by this misconduct, if we persist in maintaining an absolute government there.

If it shall be said that it is a temporary government there, I beg of some man to tell me what hope I can have or what hope any Filipino can have that it is temporary. It may be that you will enlarge it; it may be that you will put the power in more hands; but it will be absolute power still.

Have the Administration done a thing, have they said anything, that will lead the Filipino to believe that with the cessation of war there will come to him a participation in the Government under which he is to live? We, a people professing to believe not in American liberty, but in universal liberty, liberty that reaches the white man and the black man and the brown man alike—how can we stand before the world and in substance say we are lovers of liberty, but it is for us and for us alone? Who will believe that we are liberty loving, and what will become of that beacon light of ours that has stood for a hundred years encouraging the aspirations of patriots and liberty-loving men throughout the world when we deny to that 12,000,000 men who, whether by the providence of God, as is sometimes said, or by the valor of our arms, have come under our dominion participation in the Government under which they live, when we deny to them the right of self-government?

It will not do, Mr. President, to say that those people are incapable of self-government, for they are not. I assert what I know to be a fact, that in every community in the island of Luzon, outside of the immediate neighborhood of Manila, to-day municipal governments are being conducted by the natives of that island independent of any control by the United States authorities, and they are maintaining a decent local government there. Every town has its mayor and its council and its constabulary, and if it has not a general head, it has at least such a government there to-day as can afford and does afford protection to the people of those islands.

I do not know what would happen if we withdrew our Army. I should be afraid to try it. But I do know, or at least I believe, that we can make an arrangement with those people by which we can practically withdraw our Army and establish relations with them that shall maintain peace and order in all that country, and that is what I want to see done.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is exactly what we are trying to do.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Connecticut says that is what we are trying to do. Mr. President, there are various ways of doing various things. Yesterday the Senator from Connecticut told us what they have done over there. I want to read it. I did not intend to do so, but I will read it since the Senator has made that statement. I want to show what the Senator thinks. Those men have aspirations for liberty. Whatever may be the feeling of some men—and there are some men who believe as old Cicero did, that preservation of property and individual life is greater than liberty—there has been at all times in the history of the world a class of people who believed that liberty was preferable to all else, and were willing to die in trying to get it. Such people are not answered by saying, We have given you schools, we have given you telegraphs, we have given you this and we have given you the other thing.

What they say is, Give us liberty and we will get those things ourselves. The man who understands true liberty knows that it is a gift of God. He does not get it from any man living nor from any nation; it is his; it belongs to him. Here we are told by the chairman of our committee:

> We have gone to work with the arts of peace to see if we can not win, if not affection, respect and obedience from those people. We are building them wagon roads and railroads.

Oh, Mr. President, they have been crying for bread, and we give them a stone!

> We are covering the islands with telegraphs, so that MacArthur, in his headquarters at Manila, can communicate with every post he has.

Oh, how gratifying that must be, how encouraging to the aspirant for liberty, that the head of our great army, such an army as they never saw or heard of, can communicate with every branch of it everywhere! Oh, how likely that is to bring them into obedience and love! An obedient and loving relation with us will never be secured by simply showing our strength. We must show our justice. We must show that we are in favor of doing the right thing with them.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like to know whether, in the judgment of the Senator, we have any right to demand obedience from the Filipinos?

Mr. TELLER. That is a question which I do not care to discuss. We have demanded it; the nation is demanding it now. It is demanding it at the point of the bayonet, with shot and shell. We have not been fortunate; we are not securing it. We never will secure it, in my judgment, in that way. The question is whether we will not turn our attention to other and different methods. Good roads and telegraphs have not brought them in a loving relation with us. Neither has the surgical and medical care that the Senator says we have given them. That has not done so, either. Mr. President, why? It is simply that their aspiration is above that. They fought for liberty against the Spaniards; they are fighting against us for it now. It is possible and probable that we would give them a government better than they ever had, and possibly better than they ever will have, but they assert their right to govern themselves, which is the fundamental and underlying principle of every republic, and who can stand here or anywhere else and not have admiration for the man who is ambitious for liberty and freedom, and goes out and takes his life in his hands in order to secure it?

Mr. President, when I say that, I expect some one will get up and say that I am a traitor because I do not wish that every Filipino may be shot down and killed. I have read the remarkable record that comes to us daily of the slaughter of our own men by the bullets, by sickness, and the death of the insurgents, as they are called, at our hands. It has never gratified my heart to know that if we lost ten they lost one hundred. Those are the men under our control. No matter what our relations to them may be, or what their relation as a people may be to us, we are under obligations morally and legally to protect them as far as in our power lies. If they misunderstand us, and if they believe that we are going to do what we could hardly do, although nobody can wonder that they believe it when they see this autocratic and absolute power over there, we might without lowering our dignity, without dishonoring our flag, say to them, "Come here and commune with us, and we will agree with you that you may establish a government there of your own, and we will respect your authority there, so far as your local affairs are concerned."

Mr. President, I predict here now that that must come. There is no other way out of it. You can not maintain a great army there for any considerable length of time. In the first place, you must move your army every eight or nine months from that climate to some other. We have left them there too long.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment. We have left them there too long. They are coming back here by the scores invalided. There never has been an army that we have ever assembled that in proportion to its strength has in the time that has elapsed made so many demands upon the Pension Department as those are now making. You may take it that the great mass of them come back not as hale, healthy men, but as sick and diseased, and there are many cases of death. Now I will hear what the Senator from Montana has to say.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator's contention to be that we should extend to the Philippine Islanders the same proposition relative to independence that was incorporated in the Cuban resolution. I desire to ask the Senator if, in his judgment, the President of the United States has authority to extend any such principle to the Filipinos.

Mr. TELLER. I have not attempted to say that the President had. I am arraigning the Administration. I am arraigning the Senator from Montana and his associates in this body and the House of Representatives because they have had the power, and they know we have not got it on our side.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. I want to answer the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to have the Senator, if he will, distinctly state where, in his judgment, the authority rests in this Government to say to the Filipinos that they shall be respected hereafter as an independent people by the United States.

Mr. TELLER. If I were President of the United States, I should say it rested with me to the extent that I would say to them: "The Government of the United States, in 1898, declared this principle, which is the principle applied to Cuba, and that must apply and ought to apply to you."

The Senator seems to think that this is something new now which I have suggested. I want to call his attention to the words I used on the 20th of December, 1898, two years ago last month. I then said:

> Mr. President, I believe in the principle which was enunciated in the fourth clause of the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898—
> "That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people."

The Senator knows very well that those were my views early on that question. I repeat now what I said two years ago:

> That is a declaration solemnly made by the people of the United States when it was apparent to us all that we were going to war. We said to the world, "We are not going to war for conquest; we are going to war in the interest of freedom; we are going to war to relieve a people laboring under the plague of bad government; and when we have relieved them from this great burden and have secured peace in their borders, we are going to leave to them the management and control of their own affairs. But not until we have secured the pacification thereof are we to abandon them to their own efforts."
> That in terms only applied to Cuba, but in principle it applied to every possession of ours acquired during this war.

I want to repeat, Mr. President, that I think we are in morals bound before the world to maintain that principle on every inch of ground that we took from Spain.

I said further:

> If any Senator had suggested that in addition to Cuba there should be added the words "or any other possession we may acquire during this war," it would have met, as this joint resolution met, I believe the unanimous support of this body and of the other, and also of the President of the United States, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. These words would have been added to the joint resolution with the approbation of all.

The Senator, if he had recalled that debate, might have remembered that before the treaty reached us, before we had ever seen a copy of it, that speech was made. I supported the treaty, and I supported it as vigorously as I knew how. I supported it because I did not believe that any Administration in this country would ever think of disregarding so just a principle as that; because I believed the doctrine that power comes from the people was ingrafted and ingrained into the great political party in power. It was when I was with it, and I knew that it was at its birth. That was the great contest we were making. I thought it was in the blood and in the heart of that party, and that no Republican Administration would dare ever to think of governing a people in any other way than by recognition of their right of self-government. I may have been, and I fear now I have been, mistaken, and yet I can not at this hour see why we should have returned the treaty to Spain, and said to Spain, "We will give freedom to these people," and invited Spain to take counsel with us whether or not we were righteously and properly doing it.

Mr. President, I may have been in error; I may have relied upon a broken reed or a crooked stick, but the record of the Republican party justified me in saying that no such government as exists there, military or otherwise, could ever exist. If any man had so predicted, I do not believe he would have found a defender on this side or the other side of the Chamber, for, while I know it was said that we ought to modify the treaty, yet nobody ever predicted so disgraceful a condition as exists there to-day.

We do not want 100,000 men for anything unless it be to fight the Filipinos, and if you want an army for that add to it, meet the question fairly. It is not enough. Though you have 76,000 men, you have not got control of any considerable portion of Luzon; you practically have no control of the great island that lies below it. Although you made a treaty with the Sultan of Sulu, you have not got any sovereignty in Sulu nor any authority other than you had before you made the treaty.

Mr. President, at some other time I am going to discuss this question of the increase of the Army, detached, distinct, and separate from this other question.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], proverbially fair and candid, universally so I might say, has no intention to be otherwise to-day toward the Military Committee.

Mr. TELLER. None whatever.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think there is some misapprehension as to what this bill proposes to do. I wish to consider, in the first place, for a moment what it proposes to do with reference to the Army on a peace footing. Last winter the Senate passed—no one contradicting, as I recall it—a measure increasing the artillery. Our previous force had been about 29,000. The increase that we then proposed was quite as much or a trifle more than is now proposed by this bill.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator refers to the increase of the artillery?

Mr. PROCTOR. To the increase of the artillery alone. The question then was, What was the necessary increase of the artillery on a peace footing? The Philippine question was not considered. It was made clear that that increase was necessary to suitably care for our seacoast fortifications, a scheme which is perhaps two-thirds carried out, costing $126,000,000 or thereabouts, of very expensive works along our seacoast. Nobody questions but what that increase was and is necessary.

The present bill proposes an increase of the Army on a peace footing of five regiments of artillery, practically the same as was provided for last winter, not quite so much, and—I deal only in round numbers—five regiments of cavalry and five regiments of infantry. That increase of artillery would have given the Army about thirty-five or thirty-six thousand enlisted men. The present bill, at the minimum peace footing, gives a total of 54,000, the increase of cavalry and infantry amounting to from eighteen to twenty thousand men.

Mr. TELLER. How about the maximum? It is the minimum the Senator is speaking of.

Mr. PROCTOR. I shall get to that directly. I was very glad to hear the Senator say that he proposed to drop the Philippine question and to discuss the Army bill. So I propose to confine myself strictly to that and to existing conditions, and not to indulge in any theory about what we might do or what we ought to do with the Philippines.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him long enough, I will say that I did not introduce this question. It was introduced by the Administration defenders here.

Mr. PROCTOR. Not by me.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps not by the Senator himself, but by distinguished members of his political party.

Mr. TILLMAN. By the Military Committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let us consider what need we have of this increase aside from the artillery. I think all the members of the Senate are satisfied in regard to that. Now, as to this further increase of from eighteen to twenty thousand men. We have, as we have never had before, a use that certainly calls for all this increase on a peace footing. We have a regiment to-day on the Alaskan service, which has never been necessary before, and we do not know what day, in view of the great developments there, we may have to increase that force. Again, we must have some force in Hawaii, in Porto Rico, and possibly, if at their own request, in Cuba. I see they have suggested a proposal to us to that effect.

Now, take the condition in the Philippines. No man doubts that we must keep quite a force there for years to come. Even if we grant everything that could be asked for by the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator on this floor, we must keep a force there to protect them from themselves and to insure good, stable government.

In this service outside of this country three enlisted men count, at a very large estimate, not more than two for actual service. In Alaska, here on our own continent, we have two battalions of a regiment and another battalion here, and it is quite long enough in any of those possessions to keep a force on duty for two years, relieving one battalion each year. Everyone will admit that. So, take the figures, and you will see that the increase on a peace footing is very moderate and conservative. These figures have been stated at 58,000. If Senators will look on the slip which has been furnished them, they will see it is but 54,000 of enlisted men. The number 58,000 includes officers. It was less than 58,000 including the officers. It is only 54,000, a reduction of 5,000 from the bill as it came to us from the other House. So much for the moderation of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAFFERY. I wish to ask the Senator if that is the maximum to which the Army can be raised?

Mr. PROCTOR. I am speaking about the minimum. I think the Senate must admit that with less than 20,000 troops to care for all our outside possessions even in time of peace, knowing that not more than probably 12,000 would be available for actual service at any one time outside of the country, this is a very moderate increase.

Now, to meet the exigency, it must be admitted by all that it is much better that that should be met by the regular organization. The expense of a volunteer organization is a mistake which should not be repeated. I think the bill is sufficiently guarded to confine this increase to the present exigency. If it is not, I am entirely willing that it should be. I do not believe that any Administration would take the responsibilty of maintaining this Army at the maximum, or anything above the minimun, unless the exigency existed.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the bill contemplates having the same number of officers for the Army at the minimum that it will have for the Army at its maximum figure?

Mr. PROCTOR. Precisely the same. The addition above the minimum of 54,000 would be entirely of enlisted men. The Army, as is well known, is underofficered at the best.

Mr. MALLORY. Then, in time of peace, or on the reduced basis, you would have the same number of officers in the Army as are necessary for an army of 100,000?

Mr. PROCTOR. It would have the same number, except as is provided in the bill for some temporary increase. The permanent organization would be the same.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator has just stated that this bill would only provide for this larger number of men during the present exigency. Newly numbered section 26, on page 37 of the bill, is as follows:

SEC. 26. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

If I understand the Senator, he thinks that this would be limited to the present exigencies of the service. If so, I should like to ask if, in his opinion, the Committee on Military Affairs would not strike out the other words "or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct," so as to limit this maximum size of the Army absolutely to the present exigency?

Mr. PROCTOR. I will answer the Senator, for one, that the addition there, I think, only means to state what everyone knows to be the fact, that Congress always has the right to reduce the Army. I think it is a provision in the line of reduction rather than a renewal of the increase. I for one would be willing to have that modified so that it should read, "unless Congress may hereafter otherwise direct."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think that would be an improvement. Of course we all know that Congress has the power to reduce the Army or to abolish it whenever it sees fit to do so. But this is an expression of intention which, it seems to me, will be hereafter used, and the argument will be made that while we said we were going to limit this large army to the exigencies, we provided that this should continue until such time as Congress should act to the contrary; and the argument could be made, and would be made, that the maximum ought to be maintained until Congress said it should not be maintained.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the wording had been that it was to be continued "while the exigency existed" "and" "until Congress should otherwise direct," I should understand it as the Senator does, but I think the word "or" is a limitation rather than an extension of authority.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think exactly the reverse.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say I think it was the purpose of the Administration in submitting that, so far as I know it—I have had no confidential consultation on the subject—to limit the increase to the existing exigency, and nothing else was suggested in committee.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator if the words "or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct" were stricken out, would not the President be compelled to return to the minimum as soon as the exigency ceased?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think he would, clearly.

Mr. TELLER. Then, clearly it is intended to go beyond that.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not think that follows.

Mr. TELLER. Then, why not have that stricken out? Will the Senator agree to have that stricken out?

Mr. PROCTOR. I have stated that I would not object to have it stricken out or modified.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, but the modification the Senator proposes is to make it stronger for his side.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not so understand it.

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. BACON. I want to suggest that a modification of that section would not accomplish the purpose so long as the power granted in the second section remains unamended or unchanged. On page 12, beginning at line 17, it will be seen that there is an independent authorization to the President to increase to the maximum in his discretion. So that the striking out of the words as suggested, or any modification or any amendment at that point, unless they expressly negative the power granted in the second section, would not accomplish the object, because there is express authority given to the President; and I will read it. After going on to provide what shall be the composition of each company, regiment, etc., on line 17, page 12, the bill says:

Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of corporals in any troop of cavalry to 8, and the number of privates to 76, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not at any time be exceeded.

I understand there is a similar proviso as to other branches of the service, so that there is an express authorization, independent of the clause of section 26, to the President to increase each branch of the service up to the maximum.

If the Senator from Vermont, as a member of the Military Committee, can carry out the suggestion which has been made, it will very largely remove the objections which many of us have to this bill, because, as I took occasion to say on yesterday, our opposition is not—at least, I speak for myself, and I believe in saying that I reflect the sentiments of others—to the fact that a necessary force is put at the disposition of the President for the present requirements in the Philippines, but to the fact that thereafter this large standing army remains, and that thereafter there remains the vicious principle in the bill which enables the President to determine whether the Army shall be an army of 58,000 or an army of 100,000 men.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator will see that the clauses he refers to are plainly controlled by section 26:

That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army.

The clauses to which the Senator has referred are the special ones for the different organizations. He will see that this general clause plainly controls:

SEC. 26. That the President is authorized to maintain the enlisted force of the several organizations of the Army at their maximum strength as fixed by this act during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter direct.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator and those who are acting with him in this matter agree with the general proposition that it is the design that this bill shall be so framed as to carry out the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], then it is a mere matter of detail as to what particular language shall be used to effect this object. If it is the purpose to so frame this bill that the increased number shall remain as the number of the Army only during the emergency, then it is a very simple matter to frame the bill in such a way as to put it beyond doubt to accomplish that end. It may be that the Senator is correct in his present interpretation, but the great point is to ascertain if that is the purpose, and, if that is the purpose, I repeat it is a mere matter of detail as to what language shall be used to effect it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me first to answer the Senator from Georgia for a moment, I will then yield to him.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say distinctly that I have no authority to speak for the committee. That was a point that was not brought before us, and I shall say nothing to commit any one of the committee until that question can come before us, as it possibly will.

I say it did not occur to me at all but that the purpose of the bill was to confine this maximum increase to the present exigency. Further than that I have no authority to speak for the committee; I do not wish to be understood as assuming any, and I wish to keep myself free to act on the matter as may seem best when it comes before the committee in due form, as it will, no doubt, before this bill is passed.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before asking a question of the Senator from Vermont, I desire to read an extract from the letter of the present President of the United States accepting the nomination for the Presidency. In that document he uses this language:

Would our opponents surrender to the insurgents, abandon our sovereignty, or cede it to them? If that be not their purpose, then it should be promptly disclaimed, for only evil can result from the hopes raised by our opponents in the minds of the Filipinos; that with their success at the polls in November there will be a withdrawal of our Army and of American sovereignty over the archipelago, the complete independence of the Tagalog people recognized, and the powers of government over all the peoples of the archipelago conferred upon the Tagalog leaders.

The effect of a belief in the minds of the insurgents that this will be done has already prolonged the rebellion and increases the necessity for the continuance of a large army. It is now delaying full peace in the archipelago and the establishment of civil governments, and has influenced many of the insurgents against accepting the liberal terms of amnesty offered by General MacArthur under my direction. But for these false hopes a considerable reduction could have been had in our military establishment in the Philippines and the realization of a stable government would be already at hand.

Now, I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont why it is not possible to reduce rather than increase the Army in the Philippines, inasmuch as the election is now over and has gone in accordance with the President's suggestion in his letter of acceptance?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, that is not the question that I am discussing. [Laughter.] I do not propose to discuss the political situation in the Philippines. I stated that the exigency there was certainly sufficient, and would be even if everything that the Senator foreshadows as possible should occur; even when that happy condition shall be brought about the situation will be such as to demand the full peace footing, and I do not believe this Administration or any other will continue the Army beyond that. No Administration would dare to assume that responsibility any longer than the actual exigency exists. It exists there to-day, and every day's delay may cost us many lives.

I appeal to Senators to consider the situation that actually exists, the facts of the case, and act promptly upon this bill.

Mr. MONEY. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I wanted to ask the Senator a question before he took his seat. In the first place, admitting, for the sake of the argument only, the truth of all he has stated as to the situation and the necessity for an increase in the Army, I wish to ask him if it would not be quite sufficient to insert here "for the term of two years, unless the decrease is otherwise directed by Congress or is exercised by the President at his discretion?" The point of that is this: It is the observation in all countries that have constitutional governments that it is very much easier to increase the army than to decrease it, and heretofore it has been sufficient for any exigency to supply for a term of two years an increased force. Why would it not be sufficient in this contingency as well as in the others, that is, admitting all the necessity for the increase which the Senator has urged or that has been urged by this committee so far?

It has been the usual thing to do, and the honorable Senator and his committee, distinguished committee as it is, are aware of the fact that the British people are so jealous of this matter that they never allow it for longer than two years at a time. They hold in their own hands the power to dissipate the whole fabric which they have themselves put together if they think it wise. In view of that fact and the sufficiency heretofore of a limited period of time, I should like to ask him if an amendment to that effect would be acceptable to the committee and himself?

Mr. PROCTOR. Such a proposition would be unwise indeed. It is just the trouble we are laboring under now. We made this increase limited in time, and called out volunteers limited to next summer—June 30. It is just the trouble now. We have our work to do over again. Those volunteers were sent over there at tremendous expense and must be brought back, and of course they were nowhere near so efficient as regulars, for the reason that their organization was new. The men were just as good, but there was not time to make them soldiers. They could not have the officers to teach them how to care for themselves. It is just the mistake we made in the civil war. We enlisted men for thirty days, for three months, for one year, for two years, and found by sad experience that an enlistment that would last through the emergency was a necessity and an economy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator seems to ignore, in the position he has just assumed, that it is impossible for us, according to the experience of England in sending troops to the Tropics, to maintain any soldier there, with any regard for his life, any longer than, I will say, two years as the maximum, and that would be equivalent to a sentence of death to most of them. The question of replacing them will come up every two years, anyhow by reenlistment, unless we have an army that we can swap back and forth every two years or eighteen months; and if we were to maintain 75,000 there, under those circumstances we would have to have 150,000 as a permanent establishment in order to swap back the troops from the Temperate Zone to the Tropics. You can not get rid of that idea.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit another idea, I suggest to the Senator that he provide this increased organization for three years, which is the regular term of enlistment in the Regular Army, and have it terminate at that time, to be renewed again if the political power of this Government sees fit that it shall be done. The Senator will recognize, as every Senator here will, the great difficulty that will be experienced in reducing the Army. We all know the "pull," as it is called, of gentlemen who hold positions in the Army of great honor and some profit, and the other difficulties. We know the difficulty with the great corporations, their influence brought to bear here, a thousand influences brought to bear in every possible direction to increase and continue the increase. I wish to ask him, in view of that fact, if an amendment to limit it to three years, which is the term of enlistment for the regular soldier in the Regular Army, would not answer the purpose and at the same time facilitate a good deal the passage of this bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator is entirely mistaken in regard to the difficulty of reducing the Army from the maximum to the minimum. There are no officers to be thrown out of places, as I have stated here. The organization is the same. It is only the number of enlisted men that is reduced. The soldiers are enlisted for three years, one-third of them going out every year, in addition to those who go out on account of sickness or by favor, so that in any year by the natural course of events the Army could be reduced to the minimum. There are no officers to be reduced.

Mr. MONEY. Ignoring that matter altogether, what about the other?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, what is the precise question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a committee amendment which the Chair supposes is under consideration, although it has not been offered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to offer an amendment. I will offer it now, to come in at the end of the bill, or I will give notice of it now, as the parliamentary situation may require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment, no consent having been given that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

Mr. HOAR. Then I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire the reading of the remainder of the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not informed that it had not been completed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has not been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will conclude the reading of the report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to make some remarks in that connection. I do not intend to filibuster against this bill if the Administration or the Administration Senators will furnish us the information which justifies the increase of the Army to a hundred thousand. I am going to try to get that information by every means in my power, and if I can not get it there will be delay.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, perhaps, as I have the floor, awarded me by the Chair—I wish to speak only about six or eight minutes——

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask one question.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to complete what I have to say.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not aware that the Senator from Massachusetts was recognized. I merely desire to ask a question.

Mr. HOAR. I was recognized by the Chair, and sent up an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I merely wish to inquire whether the bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not. It is in the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no further military force shall be used in the Philippine Islands, except such as may be necessary to keep order in places there now actually under the peaceable control of the United States and to protect persons or property to whom, in the judgment of the President, protection may be due from the United States, until the President shall have first proclaimed an amnesty for all political offenses committed against the United States in the Philippine Islands, and shall have, if in his power, agreed upon an armistice with persons now in hostility to the United States, and shall have invited such number, not less than 10, as he shall think desirable of the leaders or representatives of the persons now hostile to the United States there to come to the United States and state their wishes and the condition, character, and wishes of the people of the Philippine Islands to the Executive and Congress, and shall have offered to secure to them safe conduct to come, abide, and return, and shall have provided at the public charge for the expenses of their transportation both ways and their stay in this country for a reasonable and sufficient time for such purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if this were the common Army appropriation bill, such as we get every year in time of peace, I should deem it a great presumption on my part if I were to undertake to act against the judgment of the Executive, or of the experts of the War Department, or even of the Committee on Military Affairs who have reported it to the Senate. I do not know, as they do, how many soldiers we ought to have in time of peace. We have a vast coast line; we are the manufacturing, and are to be soon, I hope, the commercial rival of the world. The whole world to-day is at our doors. The great, black storm cloud which rose so suddenly in China, is as yet by no means scattered. No man knows how soon or how suddenly some great conflict may be upon us.

I had supposed that a reasonable number for the Regular Army in time of peace would be 1 soldier to every 1,000 of our population. This would make 77,000 men. I have thought also that there should be a skeleton of officers ready for the organization of a considerably larger force than this, so that if war should come upon us we should not have to repeat for the first year the mortifying experience which we have gone through in the past, where great and difficult duties had to be discharged by untrained men called suddenly into the service. This I understand from common report to be the opinion of the accomplished soldier now at the head of the Army.

So, if we had no question before us but that of a permanent military policy in time of peace, I should not vote against this bill if the experts thought there should be an army of 100,000 men merely because I myself thought it ought to be but 77,000.

But, Mr. President, the Constitution provides that no appropriation of money to the use of the Army shall be for a longer term than two years. There is no doubt that it was meant by this provision that the use to which the Army shall be put shall be wholly under the control of Congress. If we leave it to the Executive to carry on war, great or small, at his sole discretion, or to use permanently the great military power of the country for any purpose of coercion in any way, we shrink from a constitutional responsibility.

Now, the increase of the Army which is now proposed is asked not as a general permanent pacific policy. It is put on a different ground—that this increased force is needed to carry on military operations in the Philippine Islands and to hold an unwilling people in the condition of enforced subjection purely by military power. To that policy and to that purpose I am utterly opposed; and being so opposed, it is my duty to say so—and it is the only opportunity I am likely to get—by voting against this bill.

The President in his last message says:

We will be required to keep a considerable force in the Philippine Islands for some time to come. From the best information obtainable we will need there for the immediate future from 45,000 to 60,000 men. * * * It must be apparent that we will require an army of about 60,000, and that during the present conditions in Cuba and the Philippines the President should have authority to increase the force to the present number of 100,000.

So the President thinks, if I understand him aright, that but for the present conditions in the Philippine Islands and Cuba 60,000 men are all we need—17,000 less than the estimate of the General of the Army.

We have therefore presented to Congress the distinct question whether we will raise 40,000 men for use in holding the Philippine Islands in subjection.

Let no man say that it is a question of supplies for the soldiers now engaged in a war lawfully declared by Congress. Congress never has acted in this matter. This is the first occasion where a distinct vote has been asked of the two Houses of Congress upon the question of reducing this unwilling people to subjection. The soldiers who are there now are to come home in accordance with the limitation of their enlistments.

The President has declared his purpose to keep order in those islands until Congress shall act. He has not in any official communication to us, that I can now remember, recommended that Congress continue a policy of subjugation. On the contrary, he expresses in his message the desire of—insuring the benefits of liberty and good government to the Filipinos, in the interest of humanity, and with the aim of building up an enduring, self-supporting, and self-administering community in those far Eastern seas.

Mr. President, if those words mean to you what they mean to me, if they mean what the American people have always held them to mean throughout our past history, they express with the beauty, precision, and clearness which always characterized their author exactly what I think we ought to do. The Filipinos are entitled to "liberty and good government;" they are entitled to be "an enduring, self-supporting, and self-administering community." The United States, who set them free from Spain, is to insure liberty and self-government as it should, as it has done, is doing, and means to do in Cuba.

But liberty is inconsistent with a foreign yoke, is it not? Is there any Senator who will stand up here and say that the liberty of a country is consistent with a foreign yoke, or that when we insure liberty we should act like an insurance company which should itself set the insured premises on fire? That government is not self-administering whose executive, whose judiciary, whose legislative powers, whose relations to other countries, in war and in peace, whose trade, whose commerce, whose jurisprudence, are at the mercy of another and a foreign authority.

There can be no liberty, there can be no self-government, there can be in the end no political rights without independence. Our declaration of the principles of liberty, which for a hundred years has been to us as a political bible, is a declaration of independence. The dying words of John Adams, its great champion on the floor of Congress, were, "Independence forever." No man is a free man who is under guardianship, and no nation and no people are either free or independent or self-governing while they are under guardianship.

It is idle to tell us that this people is not fit for freedom. Our naval and military commanders themselves have more than once testified to the contrary. The President, in his message, says:

The Filipinos are a race quick to learn and to profit by knowledge. He would be rash who, with the teachings of contemporaneous history in view—

By which, of course, he means what has happened within the last two years—would fix a limit to the degree of culture and advancement yet within the reach of these people if our duty toward them be faithfully performed.

I say, Amen! Our duty to them is just to let them advance. The way to teach them to swim is to let them swim. The way to teach them to be fit for liberty is to set them free. The way to help them to their advancement is to let them advance.

Mr. President, that man has learned very little of the lessons of history who has not understood that every race and every people and every condition of men must advance in its own way and can never advance in a way prescribed by another. The Indian—and we have made enormous mistakes in dealing with him—if he is ever to be anything, must develop into a consummate Indian. The Oriental must develop into a consummate Oriental. The negro must develop into the perfection of the negro, as Toussaint L'Ouverture did in San Domingo.

There was a French philosopher some years ago of whom I heard who undertook to raise frogs for the market, and he concluded that the tail of the tadpole was a great obstruction to the perfection of the frog and that if he cut off all the tails the nutrition which was wasted on the tails would go into the frog's legs and make very good eating for the Parisian people.

Accordingly he got a large pond and filled it with tadpoles with all their tails cut off. But the benevolent assimilation did not work. The tadpoles died, the man was unable to keep his contract for the frog market, and he discovered that on the whole if he wanted to make good frogs of his tadpoles for the market or for any other purpose he had better let their nature work out in the tadpole way. [Laughter.] And the United States will be in regard to all these other races than ours a miserable failure until we learn to let nature and nature's God work out these problems of natural growth in foreign races in their own way, and not in the way of the Puritans of Massachusetts or even of the white men of South Carolina.

Mr. President, I have not risen at this time in this crowded session to debate this question before 90 gentlemen who, after hearing everything I can say, have deliberately taken their own course. I do not expect to make a convert, and I am too old a lawyer to waste my time in talking to the jury just after they have rendered a verdict. I do not expect to change your opinion, but I deem it a duty to myself to express my own.

There never has been, within my knowledge, a matter of such vast public concern in regard to which American people seem to be so utterly without accurate knowledge of the important facts as in respect to the war in the Philippines. I hold it absolutely incredible that if the facts were known there could be any considerable difference of opinion here or anywhere else in this country as to our duty.

Will any man stand up in the face of any American audience, will any Senator rise here in his seat and affirm that if the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands or any large number of them be a people in the sense in which we use that word, in which it is used in history, in the sense in which we use it in our great Declaration of Independence, if they desire independence and if they are fit for liberty, especially if they desire a republic and but for us could establish and maintain it—will any man, I say, rise and declare that we can rightfully use our vast power to crush them out, to subject them to our will, and justify or excuse our conduct by talking about oriental trade or military glory or by declaring that where the flag has once gone it must forever stay, right or wrong?

Gentlemen have been debating this question before the people and have in general left greater darkness about the matter than they found when they begun. One gentleman tells the people that the Filipinos are a race of savages and unfit totally for self-government. But the President of the United States contradicts that. Admiral Dewey contradicts it. He says they are fitter for self-government than the Cubans.

Now, another gentleman tells us—it has been said on the floor of the Senate—that Aguinaldo, the Filipino leader, represents but a small portion of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, one race among many. General MacArthur, who is now in command there, says he thought so in the beginning, but that he has come reluctantly to change his mind, and he now thinks Aguinaldo represents that people, and that they are loyally devoted to him.

Now, what is the truth about that, gentlemen? Are they fit for self-government or are they not? Is Aguinaldo, as all his people say, a loyal patriot, and as President Schurman said, the head of the old commission, an honest and patriotic man, as the Senator from Colorado said on this floor, or is he a man who sold out liberty for a bribe? Who knows? Who knows?

Another gentleman tells us that Aguinaldo was never promised independence by the representatives of the United States, and that Admiral Dewey says Aguinaldo lies when he says he was. To which General Anderson, then in command of the military forces there, makes answer, twice repeated over his own signature, that he was present when Aguinaldo had his interview with Admiral Dewey, and that, although Dewey did not tell Aguinaldo so, he did.

We are told from another quarter that the people of the Philippine Islands are now almost wholly subdued, and that only a few outlaws and bandits and adventurers and criminal and unscrupulous persons are against us. But we are told by returning soldiers and officers, we are told by letters upon letters from the Philippine Islands, that we hold but a single railroad, over which a military patrol has to be sent before every train, and that there is not a place outside of Manila in the islands where an American officer dares to cross the street alone, unless heavily armed.

We are told in the President's message, as I read yesterday, that the opposition is substantially over. I read the exact words. And we are told from the Committee on Military Affairs, almost in the same breath, that the rebellion was never so hot and so powerful as it is to-day.

Now, which of these things is true? Who knows? It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to have now a commission made up fairly of men of the highest character and standing, representing all parties and all shades of opinion, to ascertain the truth of the fact and make it known to Congress and to the American people.

Men of different ways of thinking should be appointed in whose declaration everybody on both sides of the question would put implicit and absolute confidence. I hope, if there be an opportunity and I see a chance for success, to try to get such a commission appointed before the present session is over. If not, I am afraid we are to have another season like the last. I have no fear that in the end the American people will not come to their senses on this subject and will not be found on the side of righteousness, justice, and liberty.

Why, the Senator from Colorado just now affirmed as a matter within his knowledge—of course, nobody understood him to mean within his ocular vision, but as asserting by evidence which he had the right to trust implicitly as he would trust his own senses—that they had still over a large part of those islands local government administered in peace and in order outside of the authority of the United States. Did I misunderstand that?

Mr. TELLER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator and the Senate that I made that assertion on a statement made to me by a Regular Army officer, who had been practically all over the island of Luzon. So that is correct; there is not any question about it.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I understood the Senator, in substance. Now, Mr. President, how many people in the United States believe that, and are talking and voting on this question with the knowledge that that is the fact? Is it true or is it false? Are we reducing a race of Oriental savages to order, or are we crushing out at the beginning of this new century a people of ten or twelve million who have established and can maintain a republic, with law and peace and justice and education and schools and colleges and libraries? Which is the truth?

I should like to ask my friends on this side of the Chamber whether they think it is unreasonable, in the light of the history of the great Republican party, to have these questions settled before we go on to break to pieces this fabric of liberty which, whether fair or beautiful or not in our eyes, is the best fabric that the Oriental people have yet been able to design?

Mr. President, one thing will tend to throw light on this question more than any other, and that is to give a hearing before the people and Congress, as my amendment proposes, to the leaders of the Philippine people themselves.

Let them come over here and state their case. There is no authority under the American Constitution and laws which can hurt a hair of one of their heads. They can go in peace and, if they behave themselves, in honor from one end of this Republic of ours to the other; no man can do them harm. Let them come over here. Let us see them. Why, even Great Britain, in the times before the Revolution, received the agents of the American colonies before the Privy Council and at the bar of the House of Commons. She sent her commissioners over here in the middle of the war to confer with the Revolutionary leaders after the war had been in progress longer than it has gone on in the Philippine Islands, and it was we, and not they, that refused the interview.

I think Mabini and Lopez, whose dignified answer to a proposal to bring the Filipino youth over here and educate them in our schools we have just seen, and Aguinaldo himself might tell us something of the disposition of their people which could be of use to us, and could report when they went home something of the character and purposes of the United States, which might be well for both parties to know.

Mr. President, if we are to stand in this attitude to this people; if we are to say to them, "Go down on your knees, lay your hands on your lips, your lips in the dust, before we have anything to say to you," then, if the Filipinos be men and not beasts; if they, too, were created in the image of God; if the spark which is kindled in every other human bosom be in theirs also, this war is to go on until every Filipino is destroyed of one sex, and then, according to an utterance which we should think sublime if it had occurred in our own history, the women will take it up and it will keep on till they are exterminated also.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the United States—and by the United States I include all the departments of the Government—have undertaken to suppress rebellion and enforce the laws. The reason why it should not be done is said to be the right of every people to independence; that that right is universal, unqualified, and supersedes all other rights; that the United States has no right to extend its boundaries to take in other territory and other people without their consent.

Now, that is not the way the power of this Government has been construed from the beginning. It is not the way it was construed by the author of the Declaration of Independence. Immediately after his inauguration as President of the United States, Mr. Jefferson commenced laying his plans to acquire Louisiana, a vast country, which about doubled the area of the then United States, and inhabited by a large population, mostly savages, but in Louisiana there was a population sufficient to make a large State at the time.

Did he consult the inhabitants and take their advice? Not at all. He made a treaty purchasing the country, and Congress made the appropriation necessary to carry it into effect, and it was years and years before those people did any voting. The planters, however, and those who knew anything about it, protested. Those who did not know anything about it and were savages at the time protested as best they could; they have done so for a hundred years, and they are at it yet. The Indian wars that followed from that acquisition are not entirely over, and many of the inhabitants still declare themselves as having independent governments. To say that we have no right to govern in the Philippines is to say that we have no right to govern in Sitting Bull's country, or in the Indian Territory, or anywhere where the inhabitants are still claiming independence.

Jefferson did not indorse that doctrine, nor did he indorse their right to rebel against the Government of the United States. When Aaron Burr, who had been Vice-President, went down to Louisiana to set up an independent government, although it was a mere allegation that such was his intention, it aroused the Administration, and Mr. Jefferson had him arrested and tried in Richmond for treason. The only reason why the Government failed to convict him was because they could not prove the overt act. The people then in Louisiana had as much right to resist the power of the Government of the United States as they have to-day in the Philippines.

There was no consulting of the governed in Florida. The acquisition of that country was made pretty much unanimously against the protest of all the inhabitants, and it was followed by a seven years' war. There was no consent of the governed in the case of the territory acquired from Mexico, although there were hundreds of thousands of people there. Their consent was never asked. They protested to the last extremity, and those of them now living still protest, and would like to go back to their old country.

We do not regard that policy as a violation of the principle of the Declaration of Independence. The Declaration of Independence means that the right to liberty shall be secured by all. Jefferson devised a Territorial system which has been followed out in practice ever since, which secures liberty to all. It has been tried for a hundred years, and the people there have had as much liberty, except in voting for President and members of Congress, as any other people.

The people of the Territories are not oppressed. They have free government and independence in its highest sense. The country that was acquired from Mexico and from France and Spain would have had no liberty but for the liberty we extended. Where the Territorial system devised by the fathers goes, there goes liberty, there goes independence, there goes self-government. When that system was applied to the Philippines legally and properly, according to all the precedents, when the territory was annexed by purchase and by conquest, it became the duty of the President of the United States to see to it that the laws were enforced. The statutes of the United States compelled him in the discharge of his duty to put down the rebellion. Both Houses of Congress recognized that duty and made the necessary appropriations.

Shall that rebellion be put down? What sacred rights has Aguinaldo? At the time Dewey entered Manila Harbor he was in exile; he had left the country for money, agreeing not to go back. He went back there in an American ship, and if he cooperated with the Americans he did it under a promise to aid the United States. It was the United States that broke the power of Spain, and the idea is absurd that when the United States had broken the power of Spain this usurper became a sovereign and we must bow to him, that the United States must lower the flag to him. After the United States had taken him back there and broken the power of Spain, what right had he to set up a rebellion and fire upon the flag, as he did?

All this quibbling about a contract with him is absurd. All the officers of the Army and Navy deny it. All the circumstances deny it. Who was he? An exile who had been bought off and had left the country. What right had he to go down there and, without notice to the Government of the United States, fire upon the flag, as he did two days before the ratification of the treaty? The treaty was ratified with a full knowledge that Aguinaldo was in rebellion, and the Senate by its vote commanded the President to put down that rebellion. The appropriation made by the other House demanded it. Now, we have undertaken it, and it is proposed to surrender to Aguinaldo and send commissioners to him while he stands in haughty defiance.

No, no; let him be arrested and brought here as Burr was, and let him be tried for his treason, if you please, or shot by military authority. Is it seriously claimed that the United States must surrender to a person who was in exile and who went back there under the pretense of being a friend, that the United States must reverse all it has done, after it has pledged itself not only to Spain, but to all the world to protect life and property in the Philippines and has assumed obligations that it can not avoid? After all this has been done shall we show weakness until the enemy which has defied the country, until the rebel who has fired upon the flag, until the treacherous foe shall have been put down?

It is the voice of the American people that the rebellion shall be put down. Any pandering to Aguinaldo will be condemned by the whole country at large. The people say now, "Put down the rebellion;" and that we will then extend liberty and independence there as we have done in every other territory no one doubts. There is no idea of oppression. The people there have had the same privileges and liberties that we always extend, but we must first put down the rebellion before we can administer the laws. That being the case, every argument against making the necessary appropriation, everything that retards prompt, unanimous, and vigorous action, tends to prolong the war and tends to encourage the enemy.

The people of the United States have passed upon these very questions. They, by an overwhelming vote, have approved what the President has done, and they have approved what Congress has done. They expect now that the dignity of the flag shall be defended, and that we shall go forward until the rebels lay down their arms.

Do you talk about bringing rebels in arms here and traveling through the country? Let them lay down their arms. Never under any circumstances shall rebels in arms, rebels who so treacherously betrayed the authority of the United States, be invited here.

Aguinaldo never could have gone there but for the United States. He, without consulting the Government of the United States, set up a government, took charge of the whole business, and undertook to drive the armies of the United States from the islands. He has failed, and will fail. The people of the United States will not tolerate any halting, any delay, any hesitation, after pursuing the course that has been marked out, the only course which honor, justice, liberty, and the independence of the Philippines can possibly indicate.

Do you claim independence for them in their present state of anarchy? They know nothing of the word independence nor of liberty. We will teach it to them. They are as ignorant of it as the savages were on the plains. They are as ignorant of it as the scattered Mexicans in the land we took. They are ignorant, I say, of liberty governed by law. It is our mission now, since we have undertaken it, to teach it to them. We can not fail without being a standing disgrace among the nations of the world. We will not fail. This bill will be passed. The onward march of free institutions will continue. Liberty will be extended to the Orient—liberty governed by law, not governed by anarchy, but governed by a high sense of right and justice, which has been the case for a hundred years under our Territorial system.

It is not a system of oppression. To call it a colonial system is a misnomer. To presume that the United States when it extends its authority as a territory extends imperialism is absurd. Such a suggestion is a reflection upon what has been done in building up the States of the West, in extending our territory, in extending the areas of liberty. The same methods will be pursued there that have been pursued elsewhere, and with success equally good. Put down the rebellion as you put down the rebellion of Chief Sitting Bull or any other rebellion against the authority of the United States within the limits of our territory. That has been the policy of the country, under which it has grown, and that policy will continue. No man can stop it. This appropriation is going to be made. The Filipino rebellion is going to be put down, and the people of the Philippine Islands are going to taste, under our free institutions and under the authority of the United States, the blessings of liberty. Those blessings are going to be taken to them, and no man can prevent it.

I am sorry for having occupied so much of the time of the Senate, as I am anxious that the bill shall be passed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CAFFERY obtained the floor.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. I ask consent to introduce a proposed amendment to the bill, which I desire to have printed. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

In line 1, section (32) 26, page 38, after the word "direct," insert the words "not exceeding the period of three years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. BATE. I offer an amendment which I intend to propose to the pending bill. I ask that the amendment may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 36, section 24, line 17, after the word "Army," insert following:

"And those volunteer officers, not over 30 years of age, who held commissions during the war with Spain and are now serving in the Regular Army."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. BATE. I have another amendment to the bill, which I also ask may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 31, section 20, strike out all after the word "colonel," in line 6, down to and including the word "lieutenants" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Two lieutenant-colonels, 5 majors, 19 captains, and 19 first lieutenants.

"The enlisted force of the Signal Corps shall consist of 10 companies, whose status of service shall be the same as companies of the Corps of Engineers. Each company shall consist of 9 first-class sergeants, 18 sergeants, 18 corporals, 45 privates (who may be either of the first or second class), and 1 cook."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. BATE. I have one more amendment to the pending bill, which I also ask to have read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 26, line 7, after the word "examination," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War be authorized to appoint in the Hospital Corps, in addition to the 200 hospital stewards now allowed by law, 100 hospital stewards: Provided, That men who have served as hospital stewards of volunteer regiments, or acted in that capacity during and since the Spanish-American war for more than six months, may be appointed hospital stewards in the Regular Army: And provided further, That all men so appointed shall be of good moral character and shall have passed a satisfactory mental and physical examination."

Mr. BATE. I wish to state that, though I am opposed to the bill, I offer these amendments so as to perfect it as far as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. I simply want to make a parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator from Louisiana will pardon me.

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Chair stated that "the bill is now in the Senate," and I ask, not for the purpose of controverting the statement of the Chair, but for information, in what way the bill got into the Senate? I did not know of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original bill, the Senate bill, has been heretofore considered in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, and passed. The House of Representatives then sent back an amendment to the Senate bill. That amendment does not go into the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, but is considered in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I had forgotten for the moment that the original bill passed the Senate and went to the House. I had lost sight of that fact.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill, which I ask to have read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That when vacancies shall occur in the position of chief of any staff corps or department, the President may appoint to such vacancies, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, officers of the Army at large not below the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and who shall hold office for terms of four years. When a vacancy in the position of chief of any staff corps or department is filled by the appointment of an officer below the rank now provided by law for said office, said chief shall, while so serving, have the same rank, pay, and allowances now provided for the chief of such corps or department. And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief: Provided, That so long as there remain in service, officers of any staff corps or department holding permanent appointments the chief of such staff corps or department shall be selected from the officers so remaining therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. CAFFERY. Partly, I suppose, Mr. President, in reply to that part of the eloquent address of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which dwelt upon the right of the Filipinos as a people to self-government the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has cited the case of Louisiana. He has cited that case, apparently, to disprove the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, and to show that the United States in dealing heretofore with acquired territories and their inhabitants have paid no attention whatever to the consent of the people dwelling in those territories. Now, first, in order to make any kind of parallel between the Filipinos and the inhabitants of the Territory of Louisiana, it is necessary upon the part of those who contend that the Louisiana case is a case in point to favor the Administration's side of the argument to show that there was a people in the Territory of Louisiana in the sense in which that word is used in international law.

What are the facts in regard to the Territory of Louisiana? From a census taken shortly after the purchase of that Territory—out of which, by the way, some 26 States and Territories have been carved, forming more than one-half of the then area of the United States—it was shown that the sum total of white inhabitants of all of that vast domain, embracing about 800,000 square miles, was about 19,000 people—19,000 human souls outside of the scattering bands of Indians that roamed over that trackless waste. First, is there any comparison whatever between a people consisting of 10,000,000 inhabitants, occupying a territory not hardly the twentieth of the size of the Territory of Louisiana, having established institutions of their own, having armies of their own, capable of municipal government, at least, of their own, capable of carrying on the affairs of their own government, and those scattered bands of disunited people that inhabited the expanse of the Louisiana Territory?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. How many people would be necessary in order to have rights? The people to whom the Senator from Louisiana refers were white people. There were several hundred thousand—nearly a million—of the inhabitants there who were not white. Did they not have any rights? In other words, does the constitutional principle change with the number of inhabitants? Do we have to take a census to decide as to their rights?

Mr. CAFFERY. The rights of an individual are one thing. As individuals people are entitled to all the rights declared in the Bill of Rights from our standpoint; but we are now talking of the right of a people to a government and not of the right of a people to personal security. That right is independent of government and precedes government. It is true that governments are instituted to protect those rights; but those rights exist a long time before government and can not be destroyed by government.

There is no parallel whatever between the cases. This case of Louisiana is constantly asserted and reasserted as a parallel to the oppression in the Philippines. The argument of the Senator from Massachusetts can not be turned aside or overborne by the citation of the case of Louisiana.

Again, Mr. President, the American people who inhabited the Territory of Louisiana were so anxious to acquire it that they were themselves upon the point of war with Spain to make their passageway down the Mississippi and into the Gulf; and it is known to history that one of Mr. Jefferson's reasons for the acquisition of that Territory was to obviate war between the United States and Spain.

Mr. BACON. On that issue.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; on that issue.

Mr. BACON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAFFERY. So that the case of Louisiana might as well be left out of the question.

But there are other points of dissimilarity greater than the point of the absence of a people sufficiently large and sufficiently united to constitute national life. There was a territory right next to us; it was in the Temperate Zone. In the nature of things it would, like a ripe pear, after a while fall into the grasp of our Republic and become incorporated into it. The parallel with the Philippines does not meet that point of similarity. We can never incorporate the Filipinos as an integral portion of our people. They are absolutely unassimilable. We now have evidence in the matter of this difficulty between China and the Christian powers of the earth of the absolute impossibility of advancing these people up to modern ideas and modern civilization. They have their own civilization and their own ideas, and it is their right to put that civilization and those ideas into just that form of government that suits them, and not us. The idea appears to prevail, and to flow from such arguments as those addressed by the Senator from Nevada to the Senate, that we are the grand apostles of freedom and right.

Mr. STEWART. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAFFERY. And we impose the yoke of tyranny upon other people, to ram down their throats our liberty and our ideas of government. Tyranny is tyranny, come from what source it may. Call it "benevolent assimilation," call it anything you please, the superimposed yoke of a foreign country upon an independent people is tyranny, and nothing else.

Now, Mr. President, take the mask off of this bill and what does it mean? It means that Congress shall shirk behind its duty; it means that Congress shall sit down and allow what in the Constitution was never contemplated, the imperialism of a Cæsar to rule us—just that sort of imperialism against which the good sense and the conservatism of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] revolted.

If we want to make war against the Filipinos, a war of extermination, a war of absolute waste and destruction, let the Congress of the United States assume responsibility and carry that war to its bitter end. We are not doing that in this instance. Under the pretext of preserving life and property and maintaining the authority of the flag of the United States, we transfer over into the hands of the Executive all the war-making power of this body; and events and facts show that it is a war of extermination that we are waging, not a war to put down a temporary uprising or a rebellion of a discontented and dissatisfied people. That is what it is, and that is all that it is.

Sir, let us boldly assume the responsibility; let us say we do this thing; we declare this war; we carry it on; we vote for this Army bill for a specific purpose, the purpose of exterminating or subduing the Filipinos, instead of having a mask to cover it and arguing that 100,000 men are necessary for a peace footing when twenty-five or thirty thousand men have heretofore proved amply sufficient for the peace establishment of the United States.

The pretext is that some of these troops are wanted in Alaska; that some of them are wanted in Porto Rico; that some of them are wanted in Cuba. Why wanted in Cuba? Are we going to let go our relentless grasp upon that island, or are we going to hold that island in perpetual subjection? Is it the purpose of the United States to carry out faithfully and honorably the statement appended to the declaration of war, that the people of Cuba are and ought to be independent of us?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. I do not understand the Senator when he says that Congress is shirking responsibility, and that we have not come out boldly. I do not see how we could come out more boldly than we have. We ratified the treaty. After the Filipinos fired on our flag, Congress passed an appropriation to enable the President to suppress the insurrection; we made it the duty of the President to do so when we acquired the territory, and both Houses of Congress participated in buying it. It was then our territory. We could not declare war, because it was insurrection, and not war. The statutes of the United States imposed upon the President the duty to put down the insurrection. We boldly imposed that duty upon him; and I do not see how we could be more bold than we were in doing that and in making the appropriations.

Mr. CAFFERY. I decline to yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield further.

Mr. STEWART. Very well. I should think he would decline, as he is getting the worst of it.

Mr. CAFFERY. Oh, that sort of a quip has no effect upon any sensible argument. I yielded for a question. I did not want a repetition of the speech of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. CAFFERY. Once is quite sufficient for me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Too much.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes; a little too much.

Sir, I said, and I repeat, that the purposes of this bill are not disclosed upon its face; they are masked. Talk about emergencies. What sort of emergencies, when there is not a man, woman, or child in the United States who does not know that the purpose of this bill and the purpose of the increase of the Army is for the waging of this war of extermination? That is a sufficient answer. Why not say so? Why not incorporate into the bill that this is for the purpose of allowing the President of the United States to wage war until it is successful in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. President, I have been honestly opposed to this whole scheme of spoliating territories belonging to other peoples; and I propounded to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] a question, if the Congress of the United States did not adopt a similar resolution to the one he offered and had adopted in the declaration of war against Spain, whether or not he would then support this war of extermination in the Philippine Islands? I think his answer was rather evasive. He answered by giving me the answer of Mr. Lincoln to the same question propounded to him after the close of the Mexican war.

But, Mr. President, I have no sort of hesitation in saying that I will not only vote against this bill, which conceals its ulterior purpose that I have adverted to, but against any and all bills whose object and purpose are to destroy the nationality of the Filipinos.

I never have believed, I do not now believe, that it was either politic or constitutional to acquire those islands, and the more I reflect on it the more I am convinced that the most unwise, the most destructive, policy that this Republic can possibly pursue is to incorporate within itself, whether they are to be held as citizens or whether they are to be held as subjects without any rights under the Constitution, far-distant peoples of different language, different race, different traditions, and different surroundings and inheritances. My opinion is that the strength of these United States, now powerful and compact, will be frittered and lost and destroyed by being stretched out to the extremities of the earth to embrace peoples and territories foreign and altogether unassimilable to our institutions and to our people.

I have just arrived in the Senate. I have not had time to dissect this bill; I have not read it; but I do say, Mr. President, that the proponents of this bill have shown no reason why the peace footing of the United States should be raised to 100,000 men. They say it is 98,000; but in round numbers it is 100,000.

As was remarked to me by a friend during the discussion of this bill this morning, you may not, after having increased the Army up to the maximum of 98,000, decrease the officers. You may decrease the number of soldiers down to the minimum; but if this bill should pass and there should be, fortunately, no use for the employment of the maximum longer than for a brief period, you would have a lot of officers without any enlisted men; you would have officers for a hundred thousand men, and you would have enlisted men to the extent of but 54,000. All these incongruities in this bill, and perhaps more—that is an incongruity, and a great one—could be pointed out after an analysis of its contents. But the subject-matter of the bill itself to me is vicious in that it covertly surrenders the war-making power to the President and throws the whole weight of responsibility upon Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. In the interest of orderly business, I suggest that all amendments offered be laid over until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of. So far as the pending bill is concerned, I think that is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments may first receive the consideration of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk. There is a very interesting pamphlet in my hands, "Hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs," full of instruction, largely composed of statements by Secretary Root, General Corbin, and other leaders. We have had 50 copies printed for the use of the committee, which is all that is allowed when a committee secures printing for its own use. So I offer a resolution which provides for the printing of a thousand additional copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs are hereby authorized to have printed 1,000 extra copies of the hearings before that committee on Senate bill 4900.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent; and agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment to the pending bill and to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BACON. I hope it may be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 31 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 31. Any officer of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, who served during the civil war, and whose name is now borne upon the official Register of the Army, and who heretofore has been or hereafter may be retired by reason of wounds received or disabilities incurred in the line of duty, or on account of age, or after thirty years' active service, shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of his retirement: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of one grade at the time of his retirement, nor to any officer who received an advance of one grade at the time or since the date of his retirement by virtue of the provision of a special act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. It had better be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is an amendment to the thirty-first section. Practically all there is of it is to give those people who retired after thirty years' service the same chance that you gave the others.

Mr. HALE. One grade higher?

Mr. TELLER. One grade higher. I do not see why a man who served thirty years should not have it. This section says:

This section shall apply to officers who have been retired on or since the 11th day of August, 1898, but shall not apply to any officer whose service on the active list does not exceed thirty-five years.

He is entitled to be retired when he has served thirty years. That is the question I wish to raise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. In order not to interpose hereafter, I should like to have an order made that all amendments which have been offered or of which notice has been given shall be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An order has been made that they shall all be printed and lie on the table. That includes the one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is an amendment of one word in line 18, page 10, striking out "bill" and inserting "act."

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 10, line 18, before the words "the Army," it is proposed to strike out "bill" and insert "act;" so as to read:

That from and after the approval of this act the Army, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, page 10, line 19, after the words "United States," to insert "including the existing organizations;" in line 20, after the word "cavalry," to strike out "a corps" and insert "12 regiments;" on page 11, line 2, after the word "Department," to strike out "an Engineer Corps" and insert "a Corps of Engineers;" in line 6, to strike out "service detachment" and insert "detachments;" in line 7, after the word "Academy," to insert "Indian scouts as now authorized by law;" so as to make the section read:

That from and after the approval of this act the Army of the United States, including the existing organizations, shall consist of 15 regiments of cavalry, 12 regiments of artillery, 30 regiments of infantry, 1 lieutenant-general, 6 major-generals, 15 brigadier-generals, an Adjutant-General's Department, an Inspector-General's Department, a Judge-Advocate-General's Department, a Quartermaster's Department, a Subsistence Department, a Medical Department, a Pay Department, a Corps of Engineers, an Ordnance Department, a Signal Corps, the officers of the Record and Pension Office, the chaplains, the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, the professors, corps of cadets, the Army detachments and band at the United States Military Academy, Indian scouts as now authorized by law, and such other officers and enlisted men as may hereinafter be provided for: Provided, That when a vacancy shall occur through death, retirement, or other separation from active service in the office of storekeeper, now provided for by law in the Quartermaster's Department and Ordnance Department, respectively, said office shall cease to exist.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, section 2, line 22, after the word "provided," to strike out "three captains shall be available for detail as adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary, and three first lieutenants shall be available for detail as squadron adjutants, and three second lieutenants shall be available for duty as squadron quartermasters and commissaries" and insert "the captains and lieutenants not required for duty with the troops shall be available for details as regimental and squadron staff officers and such other detail as may be authorized by law or regulations;" so as to read:

Of the officers herein provided the captains and lieutenants not required for duty with the troops shall be available for detail as regimental and squadron staff officers and such other details as may be authorized by law or regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That the regimental organization of the artillery arm of the United States Army is hereby discontinued, and that arm is constituted and designated as the Artillery Corps. It shall be organized as hereinafter specified, and shall belong to the line of the Army.

Mr. BACON. I understand the bill is now in the Senate, and this is the final action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. And this is the final action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon these amendments.

Mr. BACON. Upon these amendments. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that possibly while it may be very well to go on with the minor amendments, such as can be acted upon——

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not hear the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I was simply saying that as this is the final action of the Senate upon these amendments, the bill being in the Senate and not as in Committee of the Whole, while it may be proper to go on with the formal amendments, such as we have already acted upon, we should pass over an amendment like this, which is not a formal amendment. I do not myself know of any objection to it, but before we get through it may be developed that this which relates to the constitution, the very framework of the Army, may become a very important matter of consideration. I understood the purpose was now to go on simply with the formal amendments. This is not a formal amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator wish to have this remain open for the present?

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to be understood as having any special objection to it. It seems to me to belong to a class of amendments different from those on which we have been acting.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will always be open to a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BACON. That will be sufficient, if it is the understanding that at any time before the final vote such a motion can be entered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall not object at any time.

Mr. BACON. The Senator simply speaks of what will be his personal course in the matter, but unless that is clearly understood——

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about it. A motion to reconsider can be made at any time.

Mr. BACON. At any time within two days. It may be more than two days.

Mr. HAWLEY. I certainly shall not object to a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BACON. With that understanding, all right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. After these amendments are all passed upon, is not the bill subject to amendment or any of the amendments that remain in the bill subject to amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is this the final action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. After we have gone all over these amendments and disposed of them, is not the bill or any portion of the amendments open to amendment?

Mr. HALE. How can an amendment be amended that the Senate has adopted? The infirmity of the situation, if there is any infirmity in it, is that we are not in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that.

Mr. HALE. With an after opportunity of action in the Senate. It not being an original bill, but an amendment, we are considering matters in the Senate. The only relief from any action the Senate has taken now is in a motion at any time to reconsider, or a Senator, as an amendment is reached, if he is not ready to have it acted upon, may ask the chairman of the committee that the amendment be reserved and not acted upon. But after we have acted upon it in the Senate it is irrevocable unless we reconsider. It seems to me that is the parliamentary law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then it seems to me that as we go along we ought to take up the amendments which have been offered. There are a great many amendments pending here. There are Senators who wish to offer further amendments. The other amendments should be considered in connection with these.

Mr. BERRY. I would suggest, in view of the peculiar attitude of this bill, it being already in the Senate and not in Committee of the Whole, that, by unanimous consent, we let the committee perfect the bill in the way in which they desire it, with a unanimous-consent understanding that it shall still be open to any amendment, notwithstanding amendments have been agreed to. It can be done by unanimous consent in that way. I think that is a fair way to do it, in view of the peculiar condition. Let the committee perfect the bill in the shape they want it, and then let it be subject, by unanimous consent, to any amendment that may thereafter be offered.

Mr. STEWART. I think that is very fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that after the committee has perfected the bill by their amendments, all amendments may still be open to further amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have substantially, so far as I am concerned, agreed to that by saying that I shall at any time yield to a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TELLER. These amendments of the committee indicate a difference——

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Have we a right, speaking parliamentarily, to propose an amendment to a bill after it is in the Senate, without having given previous notice? That has been the ruling heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has a right by unanimous consent to do almost anything.

Mr. BATE. I understand that. I ask in view of the amendments already put in here. The bill is in the Senate, and, without having given notice, will amendments be in order?

Mr. HOAR. You do not have to give notice.

Mr. BERRY. No such notice is necessary.

Mr. BATE. That is the question I put to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would recognize any Senator at any time to offer any amendment germane to the bill.

Mr. BATE. Is it not the custom and the parliamentary law also when a bill is in the Senate that no amendment can be offered without having given such notice?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The Chair does not recognize any such rule.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the large number of sections they propose to strike out, which, I suppose, section 3 is intended to take the place of. There seems to be a difference of opinion between the House and the Senate committee as to the character of the organization. I am not sufficiently advised as to what that difference is, and I wish some Senator on the committee to explain what the difference is between the House and the Senate committees.

Mr. HAWLEY. They abandoned the old regimental organization of the artillery.

Mr. TELLER. They abandoned the present system?

Mr. HAWLEY. The present system, and consolidated it all in one grand corps.

Mr. TELLER. Under the House bill all the artillery would be practically made into one body?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; a loose body of single regiments, single batteries.

Mr. TELLER. Not into regiments?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know about that. They proposed to abolish the existing regiments of artillery and organize the batteries in one corps. We did not like it.

Mr. TELLER. That is a matter of detail as to which I would not, of course, feel competent to speak.

Mr. HAWLEY. We simply stand by the existing organization.

Mr. TELLER. Has there been any particular complaint in military circles of the existing order of things?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not that I know of. This thing came like a surprise. So we just fell back upon the old organization. It is good enough for anybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That the artillery corps shall comprise two branches—the coast artillery and the field artillery. The coast artillery is defined as that portion charged with the care and use of the fixed and movable elements of land and coast fortifications, including the submarine mine and torpedo defenses; and the field artillery as that portion accompanying an army in the field, and including field and light artillery proper, horse artillery, siege artillery, mountain artillery, and also machine-gun batteries: Provided, That this shall not be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of War to order coast artillery to any duty which the public service demands or to prevent the use of machine or other field guns by any other arm of the service under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That all officers of artillery shall be placed on one list, in respect to promotion, according to seniority in their several grades, and shall be assigned to coast or to field artillery according to their special aptitude for the respective services.

SEC. 6. That the artillery corps shall consist of an inspector of artillery, who shall be selected and detailed by the President from the colonels of artillery, to serve on the staff of the general officer commanding the Army, and whose duties shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; 14 colonels, one of whom shall be the inspector of the artillery; 13 lieutenant-colonels, 39 majors, 182 captains, 198 first lieutenants, 192 second lieutenants; and the captains and lieutenants provided for in this section not required for duty with batteries or companies shall be available for duty as staff officers of the various artillery garrisons and such other details as may be authorized by law and regulations; 21 sergeants-major with the rank, pay, and allowances of regimental sergeants-major of infantry; 27 sergeants-major with the rank, pay, and allowances of battalion sergeants-major of infantry; 1 electrician sergeant to each coast artillery post having electrical appliances; 30 batteries of field artillery, 126 batteries of coast artillery, and 10 bands organized as now authorized by law for artillery regiments: Provided, That the aggregate number of enlisted men for the artillery, as provided under this act, shall not exceed 18,920, exclusive of electrician sergeants.

SEC. 7. That each company of coast artillery shall be organized as is now prescribed by law for a battery of artillery: Provided, That the enlisted strength of any company may be fixed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the requirements of the service to which it may be assigned: And provided, That first-class gunners shall receive $3 a month and second-class gunners $1 per month in addition to their pay.

SEC. 8. That each battery of field artillery shall be organized as is now prescribed by law, and the enlisted strength thereof shall be fixed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That each regiment of artillery shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 17 captains, 17 first lieutenants, and 17 second lieutenants; 1 veterinarian, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 commissary-sergeant, with rank, pay, and allowances of commissary-sergeants of infantry; 3 battalion sergeants-major, 2 color sergeants, with the rank, pay, and allowances of battalion sergeants-major; 1 band and 12 companies of foot artillery, which may be organized into 3 battalions of 4 companies each, and 2 field batteries. Of the officers herein provided the captains and lieutenants not required for duty with the companies and batteries shall be available for detail as regimental and battalion staff officers and such other details as may be authorized by law and regulations. Battalion adjutants shall receive $1,800 per annum and the allowances of first lieutenant, mounted. Each artillery band shall be organized as now provided by law. Each company of foot artillery shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, to be assigned from among the officers hereinbefore authorized; 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 8 sergeants, 12 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 mechanics, 2 cooks, and 52 privates. Each battery of field artillery shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 2 second lieutenants, to be assigned from among the officers hereinbefore authorized; 1 first sergeant, 1 stable sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 12 corporals, 4 artificers, 2 musicians, 2 cooks, and 51 privates: Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of privates in any company of foot artillery to 85, and the number of privates in any battery of field artillery to 133, but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not at any time be exceeded: And provided, That the enlisted strength of each company of foot artillery or battery of field artillery may be fixed under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the requirements of the service to which it may be assigned: And provided further, That in cases of emergency companies of foot artillery may be employed as field artillery.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee desire to strike out, beginning with the word "battalion," in line 23, on page 15, the words:

Battalion adjutants shall receive $1,800 per annum and the allowances of first-lieutenant, mounted.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

When any artillery regiment is organized in battalions and during the continuance of such organizations the battalion staff officers shall receive the same pay and allowances herein authorized for those of infantry regiments.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say to the Senator that I shall propose an amendment to this section. I understand we are now on section 3. Am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 3.

Mr. HAWLEY. Section 3.

Mr. BACON. I intend to propose an amendment to the section, and I do not desire that anything shall be done which shall in any manner interfere with the proper consideration and action thereof by the Senate. I desire to move to strike out part of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the right will be with the Senator at any time to offer an amendment.

Mr. BACON. So that the action upon it at this time will not interfere with the amendment which I propose to strike that out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. BACON. And also a few other sections similarly situated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified, as indicated by the Senator from Connecticut. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to insert as section 3 what has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to insert as section 4 the following:

SEC. 4. That the President is authorized, in his discretion, to arm and equip the field artillery as light artillery, horse artillery, siege artillery, or mountain artillery, or with any field or machine guns which are, or may be hereafter, adopted by the War Department as suitable for such service: Provided, That the number of electrician sergeants shall be as now authorized by law: And provided, That first-class gunners shall receive $2 per month, and second-class gunners $1 per month, in addition to their pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, section 9 will be renumbered section 5 and section 10 will be renumbered section 6.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 12 of new section 5, the words "in this bill," after the words "total number provided for," should be stricken out. They are mere surplusage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In new section 5, line 12, page 17, after the words "provided for," it is proposed to strike out "in this bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Also in new section 5, line 17, I move to strike out the words "length of service as commissioned officers" and insert "date of commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to section 5:

Second lieutenants of infantry or cavalry may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred to the artillery arm, taking rank therein according to date of commission, and such transfers shall be subject to approval by a board of artillery officers appointed to pass upon the capacity of such officers for artillery service.

It seems to me a little incongruous to authorize the President to perform an act of that kind and make it subject to the approval of some subordinates. It is not a consistent thing to do. I think we should leave the President to determine for himself whether they are capable of discharging the duties in the artillery service. That is rather an awkward provision to put in a bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me, I think the provision is only the ordinary one for an examination required for promotions in the Army. The board passes upon the capacity of such officers for artillery service.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose this is a regulation of the War Department and that the President can transfer these people without our authority?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. PROCTOR. No; not from one corps to another.

Mr. TELLER. He can not? But he can promote?

Mr. PROCTOR. They are commissioned in a particular corps—the artillery, infantry, or cavalry. He can not transfer.

Mr. TELLER. He can not make anything else of them?

Mr. PROCTOR. No.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 6, line 6, page 18, to strike out:

Three captains shall be available for detail as adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary, and three first lieutenants shall be available for detail as battalion adjutants, and three second lieutenants shall be available for duty as battalion quartermasters and commissaries.

And to insert:

The captains and lieutenants not required for duty with the companies shall be available for detail as regimental and battalion staff officers and such other details as may be authorized by law or regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 23, after the words "forty-eight privates," to insert "the commissioned officers to be assigned from those hereinbefore authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On the same page, lines 16 and 18, the word "lieutenant" should be plural. Add the "s" in each case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The next amendment was, on page 19, to renumber section 11 so as to read "section 7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, to renumber section 12, so as to stand as section 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer from the committee an amendment. I move to add at the end of the new section 7 the following:

Provided, That officers detailed from the Corps of Engineers to serve as battalion adjutants, battalion quartermasters, and commissaries shall, while so serving, receive the pay and allowances herein authorized for battalion staff officers of infantry regiments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 20, line 1, at the beginning of the line, to insert the word "artillery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 1, to strike out "and twelve for the Corps of Artillery;" so as to read:

SEC. 8. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army, at the rate of one for each regiment of cavalry, artillery, and infantry in the United States service, with the rank, pay, and allowances of captains of infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 10, page 20, after the word "regiments," to strike out the words "or to the Corps of Artillery;" so as to read:

And provided, That the office of post chaplain is abolished, and the officers now holding commissions as chaplains, or who may hereafter be appointed chaplains, shall be assigned to regiments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. In line 5, page 20, the word "thirty-five" before "years" should be stricken out and "forty" inserted. That is a committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 5, strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Provided, That no person shall be appointed a chaplain in the Regular Army who shall have passed the age of 40 years, nor until he shall have established his fitness as required by existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, to renumber section 13 so as to stand as section 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 19, to strike out the word "active;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That the Adjutant-General's Department shall consist of one Adjutant-General with the rank of major-general during the service of the present incumbent of the office and with the rank of brigadier-general thereafter, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, to renumber section 14 so as to stand as section 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to renumber section 15 so as to stand as section 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I have a committee amendment, which I offer to section 14, new section 10, line 5. I move to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in the same line to add the word "general" after the word "inspectors;" in line 6, after "inspectors," to insert "general;" in the same line to strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" and in line 7, after "inspectors," to insert "general;" so as to read:

Four inspectors-general with the rank of colonel, 4 inspectors-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 8 inspectors-general with the rank of major.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is an amendment to be voted upon nominally. It is the insertion of the word "general" in lines 5, 6, and 7, and the insertion of the word "four" in place of "three" in line 5, and the word "eight" in place of "nine" in line 6, so that it will read:

That the Inspector-General's Department shall consist of 1 Inspector-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 4 inspectors-general with the rank of colonel, 4 inspectors-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 8 inspectors-general with the rank of major.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 21, section 11, line 19, after the word "one," I move to insert the word "acting," and on the same page, in line 22, after the words "according to," I move to strike out "the rules of;" so that it will read "according to seniority."

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 19, after the word "one," insert the word "acting," and on the same page, line 22, strike out the words "the rules of," and on page 22, line 3, strike out the word "hereafter" and insert "thereafter;" so as to make the amendment of the committee, as modified, read:

SEC. 11. That the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall consist of 1 Judge-Advocate-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 2 judge-advocates with the rank of colonel, 3 judge-advocates with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 6 judge-advocates with the rank of major, and for each geographical department or tactical division of troops not provided with a judge-advocate from the list of officers holding permanent commissions in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department 1 acting judge-advocate with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, mounted. Promotions to vacancies above the grade of major, created or caused by this act, shall be made, according to seniority, from officers now holding commissions in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department. Vacancies created or caused by this act in the grade of major may be filled by appointment of officers holding commissions as judge-advocate of volunteers since April 21, 1898. Vacancies which may occur thereafter in the grade of major in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by selection of officers of the line.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 4 of the same section, page 22, I move to strike out the word "selection" and insert the words "the appointment;" so as to read "shall be filled by the appointment of officers of the line."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was in line 5, page 22, after the word "line," to insert:

Or of persons who have satisfactorily served as judge advocates of volunteers since April 21, 1898, and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years.

Mr. BACON. What is the amendment? I see the amendment printed in roman text that the committee originally suggested. What is the amendment which the Senator from Vermont now offers to that?

The SECRETARY. To strike out "selection" and insert "appointment."

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon; that is a matter of form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was agreed to. The question now is on the amendment of the committee, which has just been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer an amendment. On page 22, line 9, I move to strike out:

Vacancies in the grade of captain in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army of officers of the grade of captain or first lieutenant.

And to insert:

Acting judge-advocates provided for herein shall be detailed from officers of the grades of captain or first lieutenant of the line of the Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. The words following should read "who while so serving."

The SECRETARY. And strike out the word "and."

Mr. CARTER. The word "and" is all right.

The SECRETARY. In line 12 strike out "and" and insert "who."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to renumber section 16, so as to stand as section 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, on page 22, to strike out, after the word "brigadier-general," the word "seven" and insert "six;" in line 23, to strike out "eleven" and insert "nine;" in line 23, to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "eighteen," and in line 24, to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That the Quartermaster's Department shall consist of 1 Quartermaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 6 quartermasters with the rank of colonel, 9 quartermasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 18 quartermasters with the rank of major, 54 quartermasters with the rank of captain, mounted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 8, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," to insert "and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain created by this act in the Quartermaster's Department the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898, and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, to renumber section 17 so as to stand as section 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 15, to strike out the words "one hundred and fifty" and insert "the number of;" in line 16, after the words "commissary sergeants," to insert "now authorized by law;" and in line 24, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," to insert "and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years;" so as to read:

SEC. 13. That the Subsistence Department shall consist of 1 Commissary-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 3 commissaries with the rank of colonel, 4 commissaries with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 9 commissaries with the rank of major, 27 commissaries with the rank of captain, mounted, and the number of commissary-sergeants now authorized by law, who shall hereafter be known as post commissary-sergeants: Provided, That all vacancies in the grades of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major, created or caused by this section, shall be filled by promotion, according to seniority, as now prescribed by law. That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain, created by this act, in the Subsistence Department, the President is authorized to appoint officers of volunteers, commissioned since April 21, 1898, and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 7 of that page I move to strike out the words "officers of volunteers commissioned since" and insert "persons who have served as volunteers subsequent to."

Mr. SPOONER. How will it read then?

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 7, strike out the words "officers of volunteers commissioned since" and insert in lieu thereof "persons who have served as volunteers subsequent to;" so as to read:

That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain created by this act in the Quartermaster's Department the President is authorized to appoint persons who have served as volunteers subsequent to April 21, 1898, and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator who has prepared these amendments if he understands that under the section as proposed to be amended an officer who went out of service after April 21, 1898, is eligible to appointment by the President if of proper age and requisite capacity?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly; persons who have served as volunteers subsequent to April 21, 1898, no matter when they went out.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not mean that they must have continuously served?

Mr. PROCTOR. It does not mean that. If they have been in the service, it does not matter whether they are in it still or not.

Mr. KENNEY. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question? Would an officer who had served in the Volunteer Army since April 21, 1898, and who has been discharged and is not now in the Army, be eligible to appointment under the provision of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. That was my question.

Mr. PROCTOR. That was the purpose of the amendment, and I think it is clearly expressed. It includes any officer or enlisted man who has served.

Mr. SPOONER. Might not that be construed as involving a continuous service?

Mr. SEWELL. We discussed that point in the committee and thought not.

Mr. SPOONER. I know, but this is to be enacted, I suppose, into law, and the opinion of the committee might not be the opinion of the administrative department. Would there be any objection to making it clear as to one who had at any time served as an officer of volunteers?

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to inserting the words "who have at any time."

Mr. SPOONER. All right.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont or the chairman of the committee to tell me if there is a provision in the bill anywhere which permits privates or sergeants or anybody else now serving to be examined and appointed as lieutenants the same as in the Regular Army, or is that provision stricken out?

Mr. SEWELL. That is the provision of law now.

Mr. TILLMAN. But this supersedes all previous laws, does it not?

Mr. BACON. The provision of law now relates only to the regulars.

Mr. TILLMAN. These will be regulars, I imagine, when we get through with it.

Mr. BACON. The eligibility of a private soldier to examination for commission in the Regular Army is limited to private soldiers in the regular service and does not embrace the 35,000 private soldiers who are in the volunteer service.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply wanted to have it understood.

Mr. PROCTOR. We will reach later the provision in regard to that matter, and I think the Senator will find it satisfactory.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, in order that they may be printed I desire to submit some amendments which I shall propose. I ask that they may be read and printed, in order that the Senate may have an opportunity to see them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia submits amendments, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. BACON, as follows:

On page 12, in section 2, beginning in line 17, strike out the following:

"Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of corporals in any troop of cavalry to 8, and the number of privates to 70."

Second. On page 16, section 3, beginning in line 11, strike out the following:

"Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of privates in any company of foot artillery to 85, and the number of privates in any battery of field artillery to 133."

And in the same section, beginning in line 17, strike out the following:

"And provided, That the enlisted strength of each company of foot artillery or battery of field artillery may be fixed under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the requirements of the service to which it may be assigned."

Third. On pages 18 and 19, section 6, beginning in line 25 of page 18, strike out the following:

"Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may increase the number of sergeants in any company of infantry to 6, the number of corporals to 10, and the number of privates to 127."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PROCTOR. In compliance with the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, the amendment on page 23, line 7, should read "persons who have at any time served as volunteers subsequent to," striking out the words "officers of volunteers commissioned since."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is this a proposition to amend the committee amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. It is an amendment accepted by the committee and offered by the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. When was it accepted by the committee? Was it accepted just now? Who is the committee?

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator can look into the Directory. The amendment was agreed to at a meeting of the committee regularly. Also, in line 23, page 23, section 13, I move to strike out——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know how this amendment affects men now in the service.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Chair will hear this amendment I will reply to the Senator's question. In line 23, I move to strike out the words "officers of volunteers commissioned since" and insert the same words as above.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 23, strike out "officers of volunteers commissioned since" and insert in lieu thereof "persons who have at any time served as volunteers subsequent to," so as to read:

That to fill vacancies in the grade of captain, created by this act, in the Subsistence Department, the President is authorized to appoint persons who have at any time served as volunteers subsequent to April 21, 1898, and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed forty years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, I should like to know the purpose of this change, and who is affected by it.

Mr. SPOONER. I made the suggestion. I was afraid that the language of the section as reported by the committee would be construed to require a limit in the appointment to men who had continuously served, and I want to leave it open so that any man who served after the beginning of the Spanish-American war, although not continuously, and who is of requisite capacity and the proper age would be eligible to appointment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know how many people this would affect and who they are.

Mr. SPOONER. It would affect everyone who is in the Army and would not limit it to men who have continuously served.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is, if he had been in but a week?

Mr. SPOONER. That would not make any difference.

Mr. PROCTOR. It would not limit it to officers. It opens it to enlisted men.

Mr. SPOONER. As it stands, without amendment, if a man had been in but a month he would be eligible to appointment and a man who has been in for a year might not be eligible.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wanted to know the names of the parties, that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. There are no names, so far as I know. I have no candidates.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator can take the muster rolls.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was on page 24, to renumber section 18 so as to stand as section 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 24, line 16, section 14, I move to strike out the following:

That nothing in this section shall change the relative rank for subsequent promotion of medical officers as arranged by results of competitive examination.

And insert the slip I have given the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, section 14, line 16, strike out the words:

That nothing in this section shall change the relative rank for subsequent promotion of medical officers as arranged by results of competitive examination.

And insert:

That nothing in this section shall affect the relative rank for promotion of any assistant surgeon now in the service or who may be hereafter appointed therein as determined by the date of his appointment or commission and as fixed in accordance with existing law and regulations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know the reason for this change. Of course if the committee have not perfected their bill it had better be recommitted and let them fix it up and let us have a report with regard to all these matters; or if it is being changed to cover special cases we ought to know that.

Mr. PROCTOR. All these amendments were fully considered and agreed to by the committee at a regular meeting. This amendment was proposed by the Surgeon-General to prevent embarrassment and question about the rank. It is an old question that was considered before I came to the Department or to the Senate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was entirely familiar with an old controversy in the Medical Corps about rank, which was finally settled by Congress, and he earnestly approved of this amendment, as it would prevent a reopening of that old difference, which he feared might come under the bill as it stood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, to renumber section 19, so as to stand as section 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 26, line 10, to strike out the word "and" and insert "who shall be a graduate of a hospital training school having a course of instruction of not less than two years;" so as to read:

SEC. 15. That the Nurse Corps (female) shall consist of 1 Superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, who shall be a graduate of a hospital training school having a course of instruction of not less than two years, whose term of office may be terminated at his discretion, whose compensation shall be $1,800 per annum, and of as many chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses as may be needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, to strike out section 20 in the following words:

SEC. 20. That the Veterinary Corps shall consist of—

A Chief Veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, United States Army.

An assistant chief veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, United States Army, to be promoted in 1905, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of veterinarian and captain.

Four veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain of cavalry, to be promoted in 1903, after competitive satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and first lieutenant.

Ten assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry, to be promoted, after satisfactory examination, from the grade of assistant veterinarian and second lieutenant after one year's service in this grade.

Twenty assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry, to be appointed after satisfactory examination: Provided, That these twenty positions shall include the veterinarians, first class, provided for in the act of March 2, 1899, who have passed satisfactory examinations, and also the six veterinarians, second class, who are now employed in the Army under said act of March 2, 1899.

All rules and regulations governing the Veterinary Corps shall be made by the Secretary of War, and the Chief Veterinarian shall report directly to that officer.

For pay of officers of the Veterinary Corps, $33,500.

Mr. KENNEY. I desire to ask the Senate to disagree to the committee amendment, and I ask the Chair whether I shall raise the question now or whether the bill should be first perfected, so that I may raise the question to-morrow or when the bill has been perfected?

Mr. LODGE. That can be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be passed over. I should think that would be the better course.

Mr. KENNEY. Let the amendment be passed over. That can be done under the unanimous agreement we had.

Mr. SEWELL. We ought to perfect the committee amendments first.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a committee amendment.

Mr. President, I rose to make an inquiry of some member of the committee concerning section 15, which creates a nurse corps in the Army, and to ask whether it is in accordance with provisions in other armies or whether it is an entirely new departure in the matter of legislation?

Mr. SEWELL. I can answer the Senator. We have examined the Surgeon-General on that point. This is what they have in the Army to-day absolutely.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Surgeon-General agreed to it fully and frankly.

Mr. SEWELL. It is the same we have to-day in the Army with the exception of one principal nurse who is provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from New Jersey, who seems to be familiar with this matter, whether there are now chief nurses who are provided? There seem to be a superintendent, chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses.

Mr. SEWELL. There are chief nurses to all hospitals.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator further whether the concluding lines of the section are now matters of law, that "they may be granted leaves of absence for thirty days, with pay, for each calendar year."

Mr. SEWELL. I think they are not.

Mr. GALLINGER. "And, when serving as chief nurses, their pay may be increased by authority of the Secretary of War, such increase not to exceed $25 per month." Is that the law?

Mr. SEWELL. I think that is the custom now, but the thirty days' leave is not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not at all familiar with military matters, but it seems to me that this is a pretty complicated provision in the matter of establishing a nurse corps for the Army. For instance, I can not see for the life of me why, when there is a superintendent at a large salary, we should then proceed to provide for chief nurses and for nurses and reserve nurses, and then make a further provision that the chief nurses may be granted, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, $25 a month more than the other nurses. I do not imagine there is going to be any difference in the duties to be performed by those nurses. I can not, for the life of me, understand why this large distinction should be made with reference to the emoluments of the two classes of nurses. Perhaps it can be explained.

Mr. SEWELL. In all our great hospitals we have a chief nurse, who gets more pay than the ordinary nurses. It is the custom in all branches of business that the head of a concern gets more pay than others, as he has more responsibility. The superintendent nurse is here in the office of the Surgeon-General in Washington, but the chief nurses may be at Fortress Monroe or at Manila, or they may be at any other place where we have a large army; and they get more pay. I asked the Surgeon-General if this made any discrimination in the pay, and he said "No; that it is what they are being paid now."

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Surgeon-General say he pays certain classes of nurses $25 a month more than other nurses?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I do not see the necessity of having this provision here; but I shall let the matter rest, inasmuch as, under the unanimous-consent agreement, I shall have the right to make any motion concerning this matter, or to offer an amendment at a subsequent period of consideration. So I will say nothing further to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] has asked that section 20, relating to the veterinary corps, shall be passed over for the present.

Mr. KENNEY. There was a unanimous-consent agreement that that portion of the bill should be passed over.

Mr. CARTER. That request should likewise include section 16 of the substitute, which refers to the same subject-matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire sections relating to the veterinary corps. Is there objection to their being passed over for the present? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I should like to be informed why it is that in the provisions for the Adjutant-General's Department and for the Inspector-General's Department there is no latitude given whereby any who had served in the volunteers might enter in the lower grades, as is provided in the other departments, the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, and the Quartermaster and Subsistence departments, and the like. I should like to know why the Inspector-General's Department does not have the like provision.

Mr. SEWELL. I should say as to the Inspector-General's Department that, as now constituted by law, the President is required to appoint the majors, that being the lowest grade in the department, from captains of the line. We have not changed it. The War Department did not want it changed. The Secretary of War is in favor of this measure. The Inspector-General's Department is a very high grade department. Its appointees are men of high standing, and it is one of those departments that it has not been thought well to throw open to volunteers.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I do not see why a like provision, which enabled men to enter the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, might not be applied.

Mr. SEWELL. It is quite applicable to the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, because we have volunteer judge-advocates-general who are better lawyers than those in the regular service.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think that may be so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 3, it is proposed to renumber "section 21," so as to make it "section 17;" in line 5, before the word "paymasters," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in the same line, after the word "colonel," to strike out "and assistant paymaster-general, five," and insert "four;" in line 7, after the word "lieutenant-colonel," to strike out "and deputy paymaster-general, twenty," and insert "nine;" in line 8, after the word "twenty," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" in line 9, after the word "captain," to insert "mounted;" in line 15, after the word "below," to strike out "twenty" and insert "nine;" in line 18, after the word "paymasters," to insert "and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years;" in line 20, after the word "section," to insert "and the persons so appointed to the grade of captain shall be promoted according to seniority to vacancies in the grade of major occurring after the number of majors has been reduced to nine;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That the Pay Department shall consist of 1 Paymaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, 3 paymasters with the rank of colonel, 4 paymasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 9 paymasters with the rank of major, and 27 paymasters with the rank of captain, mounted: Provided, That all vacancies in the grade of colonel and lieutenant-colonel created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, as now prescribed by law, and no more appointments to the grade of major and paymaster shall be made until the number of majors and paymasters is reduced below 9: And provided, That persons who have served in the Volunteer Army since April 21, 1898, as additional paymasters and whose age at the date of appointment shall not exceed 40 years, may be appointed to positions in the grade of captain, created by this section, and the persons so appointed to the grade of captain shall be promoted according to seniority to vacancies in the grade of major occurring after the number of majors has been reduced to 9. So long as there remain surplus majors an equal number of vacancies shall be held in the grade of captain, so that the total number of paymasters authorized by this section shall not be exceeded at any time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 3, to renumber section 22 so as to make it section 18; and in line 9, after the word "That," to insert "the;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. That the Corps of Engineers shall consist of 1 Chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier-general, 7 colonels, 14 lieutenant-colonels, 28 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 30 second lieutenants. The enlisted force provided in section 11 of this act and the officers serving therewith shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided, That the Chief of Engineers shall be selected as now provided by law, and hereafter vacancies in the Corps of Engineers in all other grades above that of second lieutenant shall be filled, as far as possible, by promotion according to seniority from the Corps of Engineers: And provided also, That vacancies remaining in the grades of first and second lieutenant may be filled by transfer of officers of the Regular Army, subject to such professional examination as may be approved by the Secretary of War. Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant not filled by transfer shall be left for future promotions from the corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 21, to renumber section 23 so as to make it section 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 4, to renumber section 24 so as to make it section 20; in line 6, after the word "colonel," to strike out "two lieutenant-colonels" and insert "one lieutenant-colonel;" in the same line, after the word "lieutenant-colonel," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in line 7, before the word "captains," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "nine;" in the same line, before the words "first lieutenants," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "nine;" and in line 17, after the date "1898," to insert:

But no such person shall be appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to his physical, moral, and professional qualifications, and no person not now or previously an officer of the Regular Army shall be appointed to the grade of captain or first lieutenant in the Signal Corps after he shall have reached the age of 40 years: Provided, That the President is authorized to continue in service during the present emergency, for duty in the Philippine Islands, 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of first lieutenant and 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of second lieutenant. This authority shall extend only for the period when their services may be absolutely necessary, not beyond July 1, 1902.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. That the Signal Corps shall consist of 1 Chief Signal Officer with the rank of brigadier-general, 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 9 captains, 9 first lieutenants, 80 first-class sergeants, 120 sergeants, 150 corporals, 200 first-class privates, 150 second-class privates, and 10 cooks: Provided, That vacancies created or caused by this section shall be filled by promotion of officers of the Signal Corps according to seniority, as now provided by law. Vacancies remaining after such promotions may be filled by appointment of persons who have served in the Volunteer Signal Corps since April 21, 1898, but no such person shall be appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to his physical, moral, and professional qualifications, and no person not now or previously an officer of the Regular Army shall be appointed to the grade of captain or first lieutenant in the Signal Corps after he shall have reached the age of 40 years: Provided, That the President is authorized to continue in service during the present emergency, for duty in the Philippine Islands, 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of first lieutenant and 10 volunteer signal officers with the rank of second lieutenant. This authority shall extend only for the period when their services may be absolutely necessary—not beyond July 1, 1902.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 31, line 20, in the amendment just read, I move to strike out the words "an officer of" and insert the word "in;" so as to read "not now or previously in the Regular Army."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 32, line 5, to renumber section 25, so as to make it section 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 11, to renumber section 26, so as to make it section 22, and in line 19, after the word "promotions," to insert:

Or to the periods for which the officers so promoted shall hold their appointments, and when any vacancy, except that of the chief of the department or corps, shall occur it shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army, and no more permanent appointments shall be made in those departments or corps. Such details shall be made from the grade in which the vacancies exist, under such system of examination as the President may from time to time prescribe.

All officers so detailed shall serve for a period of four years unless sooner relieved, at the expiration of which time they shall return to duty with the line, and officers below the rank of lieutenant-colonel shall not again be eligible for selection in either staff department until they shall have served two years with the line.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. That so long as there remain any officers holding permanent appointments in the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, the Pay Department, the Ordnance Department, and the Signal Corps they shall be promoted according to seniority in the several grades, as now provided by law, and nothing herein contained shall be deemed to apply to vacancies which can be filled by such promotions or to the periods for which the officers so promoted shall hold their appointments, and when any vacancy, except that of the chief of the department or corps, shall occur it shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army, and no more permanent appointments shall be made in those departments or corps. Such details shall be made from the grade in which the vacancies exist, under such system of examination as the President may from time to time prescribe.

All officers so detailed shall serve for a period of four years unless sooner relieved, at the expiration of which time they shall return to duty with the line, and officers below the rank of lieutenant-colonel shall not again be eligible for selection in either staff department until they shall have served two years with the line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SEWELL. I hope the Senator will allow us to perfect the bill. I hope he will let us go on at least for a few minutes longer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There are several controverted questions, and we have come to a point where I think we should adjourn.

Mr. SEWELL. We can put those over until to-morrow. Let us perfect the bill as far as we can.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw my motion to adjourn and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to withdraw that motion for a moment, in order that I may make an explanation, and then he can renew it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday, in the debate on this bill, I made some mention of the discharge of a soldier from my State, and, as I thought, justly criticised the War Department for turning him loose, without money or clothing or anything else, among the Filipinos. I have in my hand, sent me by the Adjutant-General this morning, a copy of the correspondence which led me into that error. I ask that my letter to General Corbin and his answer sent to me, upon which I based my criticism, may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1900.

DEAR GENERAL: I inclose a letter from one of my constituents, and beg that you will have the case investigated at once, as the old man is very much worried. Please write me at once and return inclosed letter so I may send him your answer, and oblige,

Yours, sincerely,

B. R. TILLMAN.

Gen. H. C. CORBIN,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 14, 1900.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing a communication from one of your constituents making inquiry relative to his son, of Company G, Eighteenth United States Infantry, I have the honor to advise you that the latest information in possession of this office is contained in the muster roll of Company G, Eighteenth United States Infantry, dated April 30, 1900. This roll shows that the soldier was tried by a general court-martial, sentenced to be dishonorably discharged the service of the United States, and to be confined at hard labor under charge of the guard for the period of six months. The sentence of the court was promulgated in Special Orders, No. 92, Headquarters Visayan Military District, First Separate Brigade, Eighth Army Corps, Iloilo, P. I., April 7, 1900. The soldier was dishonorably discharged in compliance with the sentence April 7, 1900, at Saray, Panay, P. I.

The sentence of confinement expired in October, and this office has no information concerning his whereabouts.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. JOHNSTON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mailed December 14, 1900.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, you will see that I very naturally fell into the error that this soldier had been discharged in the Philippines away from home, in a strange country, without any knowledge of the language, and I naturally thought it was a very wrong thing to do. I was informed this morning that I was mistaken as to the custom or the rule which prevails, though I have not yet had any information as to whether that man has been brought home or not. But section 5 of General Orders, No. 96, from the Headquarters of the Army, makes provision—and I will have it inserted—for the transport home free of charge of men discharged in any of our island possessions. I was naturally led to suppose, from the answer I received, that this man had been discharged in the Philippines, and turned loose there to the tender mercies of our new subjects; but I find he could have come home, or may be has been sent home. I am, however, not to blame for having criticised the War Department, for they did not give me the proper information. This will show that Uncle Sam is a little more reasonable and civilized in his ideas than I thought.

I ask to have section 5 of General Order No. 96 printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The section referred to is as follows:

5. An enlisted man a resident of the United States serving in the islands mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof, who is discharged the service in those islands by transfer to another branch of the service; or on his own application, whether by way of favor or by purchase; or because of confinement by the civil authorities; or by way of punishment for an offense or for disability caused by his own misconduct; or on account of fraudulent enlistment, is, by the operation of section 1290, Revised Statutes, and the act of March 16, 1896, (29 Stat. L., 63), prevented from being allowed the usual traveling allowances to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, but he will be brought by the Government to the United States on a transport free of charge.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 5, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 4, 1901.

The House was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1901.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby designate and name Mr. JOHN DALZELL, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, to perform the duties of the Chair during this day, January 4, 1901.

D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DALZELL accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States is hereby requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 2955) entitled "An act providing for a resurvey of township No. 8 of range No. 30 west, of the sixth meridian, in Frontier County, State of Nebraska," in order to correct an error whereby the bill has been enrolled as an act of the first instead of the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, I desire to state that this bill was enrolled, so far as the printing was concerned, in the last session—that is, the first session of the present Congress. It was signed by the Speaker of the House, but the enrollment of the bill was not completed, as the President of the Senate did not sign it at that time. The President of the Senate has signed it during the present session and forwarded it to the Executive, who approved it. It was afterwards ascertained that this error in dates had occurred, and the President has erased his name from it and called the attention of the Speaker of the House to the discrepancy in the dates. This concurrent resolution simply brings the bill back to the House in order to make the necessary correction.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not catch the entire statement of the gentleman from Iowa; but as I understand it, this in no way adjudicates the question presented by the bill.

Mr. LACEY. In no way whatever. It is simply a concurrent resolution asking the return of the bill from the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. NEVILLE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. CAMPBELL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. TALBERT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. MIERS of Indiana to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Johnson White in the Fifty-sixth Congress, there being no adverse report.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported a bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The points of order are reserved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the Committee on Claims will not have an opportunity to have bills considered from that committee to-day, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to set apart next Tuesday as the day on which bills may be considered in their proper order on the Calendar as reported from the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REPRESENTATION.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

After counting the House, the Speaker pro tempore announced 142 members, not a quorum, present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the yeas and nays at once, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 105, answered "present" 18, not voting 148; as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. LATIMER.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. RIORDAN.

Until 2 o'clock this day:

Mr. HILL with Mr. BERRY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the vote by which the question of consideration was raised yesterday the business before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the order of the House ordering the yeas and nays on the motion on the question of consideration. The yeas and nays are already ordered, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] calls up that business, that is the regular order.

Mr. OLMSTED. As I understand it, the regular order is the calling of the yeas and nays on the question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the regular order now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the gentleman will not now consent that this resolution be committed to the Committee on the Census. I make that request.

In order to save time, I offer that. Instead of calling the yeas and nays, which have been ordered on the question of consideration, I ask that the resolution be committed to the proper committee, the Committee on Census.

Mr. OLMSTED. When the House has voted to consider this resolution, then I will consider a suggestion of that kind. I may say that it had been my intention at the proper time—at least I had seriously thought of offering such a resolution; but I prefer that the yeas and nays be taken on the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I submit to my distinguished friend that it will take forty-five minutes of valuable time to take the yeas and nays on the question of consideration.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think that this side of the House can take all the responsibility that it will be called upon to bear for time wasted in this matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very good; then I hope the gentleman will not intimate that there is any desire to waste time on this side. We are ready to go on with the public business.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have made no such suggestion; but if the shoe fits anybody, he can wear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on considering the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken: and there were—yeas 104, nays 91, answered "present" 10, not voting 150; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. NAPHEN, on the Olmsted resolution.

On this vote:

Mr. DAHLE with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

Mr. NEEDHAM with Mr. RIORDAN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, on this resolution I demand the previous question until its final passage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to commit the resolution to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, in the opinion of the Chair, is not in order, the demand for the previous question having precedence. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order: and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to postpone the consideration indefinitely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion is not in order.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 72.

Mr. OLMSTED. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending that demand, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. But the question is being taken on the demand for the previous question——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It takes precedence over the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. And the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has already ordered the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the previous question, and the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in order. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 98, answered "present" 10, not voting 144; as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I was present at the first call, but did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening for his name when it should have been called, but did not hear it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama was called, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I was present in my seat, but did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. GROW's name was called, and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced:
Until further notice:
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. NOONAN.
Mr. HULL with Mr. GILBERT.
Mr. GROUT with Mr. BRADLEY.
On this vote:
Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. CATCHINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote is very close, and the Chair prefers to have a recapitulation.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, having reason to believe that this resolution will be referred to the Committee on Census, and that ample opportunity will be given for debate. I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. PEARSON's name, and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC].

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, it has been my intention to deliver some remarks on the fourteenth amendment, but as it would take about three-quarters of an hour, and I have only five minutes' time, I can not express myself in the allotted time. It was my intention to offer an original proposition or resolution on its own merits. I will have it read from the Clerk's desk and let it go as a substitute for the pending resolution to the Committee on Census by agreement with my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. If I can get the time before the Committee of the Whole House when it is considering the census bill, I will make some observations in regard to the duty of the House as to reapportionment under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] has this read in his own time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the continued enjoyment of full representation in this House by any State which has, for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, denied to any of the male inhabitants thereof, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, the right to vote for Representatives in Congress, Presidential electors, and other specified officers, is in direct violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that in such case "the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State," and is an invasion of the rights and dignity of this House and of its members, and an infringement upon the rights and privileges in this House of other States and their representatives; and

Whereas the States of Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut, Delaware, California, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Wyoming, Oregon, and other States do, by the provisions of the constitutions and statutes of said States, and for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, deny the right to vote for members of Congress and Presidential electors, as well as the executive and judicial officers of such States and members of the legislatures thereof, to male inhabitants 21 years of age and over and citizens of the United States; and such denial in certain of the said States extends to more than one-half of those who prior to the last apportionment of representation were entitled to vote in such States; and

Whereas in order that the apportionment of membership of the House of Representatives may be determined in a constitutional manner: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Director of the Census is hereby directed to furnish this House, at the earliest possible moment, the following information:

First. The total number of male citizens of the United States over 21 years of age in each of the several States of the Union.

Second. The total number of male citizens of the United States over 21 years of age who, by reason of State constitutional limitations or State legislation, are denied the right of suffrage, whether such denial exists on account of illiteracy, on account of pauperism, on account of polygamy, or on account of property qualifications, or for any other reason.

Resolved further, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a select committee of five members from the membership of the Census Committee of the House of Representatives, who shall investigate the question of the alleged abridgment of the elective franchise for any of the causes mentioned in all the States of the Union in which constitutional or legislative restrictions on the right of suffrage are claimed to exist, and that such committee report its findings within twenty days from the date of the adoption of this resolution to the said Census Committee, and that within one week after the said report shall have been received by the Census Committee the Census Committee shall return a bill to the House of Representatives providing for the apportionment of the membership of the House of Representatives based on the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in reference to this resolution and in answer to some suggestions that have been made, that it was offered by me not in antagonism to nor in favor of any of the pending reapportionment bills, but entirely, as I conceive, from a constitutional standpoint. It is not aimed at any particular State. While I have mentioned two or three States in the preamble, in order to lay the foundation for the resolution, the resolution itself is general. It is the plain meaning of the Constitution, the plain language of the Constitution, so plain that there can be no possible difference of opinion as to its construction, that where a part of the male inhabitants of the State, 21 years old and citizens of the United States, are denied the right of suffrage, the right of representation in that State shall be reduced accordingly.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. PEARSON. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this information can be had in time for action by this Congress?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no doubt that it can. It is not the intention of this resolution to institute any investigation of the elections in any State, but simply to ascertain in what States the right of suffrage is denied, so as to fall within the provision of the Constitution of the United States which requires a reduction in the basis of representation.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. As soon as I have answered the question of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON] I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

I imagine that by consulting the suffrage articles in the constitutions of the various States and by ascertaining what denials of suffrage there are to any male citizens 21 years of age, and then by consulting the Director of the Census to ascertain how many such citizens there are in any given State, approximate, indeed very reliable, data can be obtained for the use of this House, and in a very short time.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman pardon one further suggestion? I have called at the Census Bureau and have asked both Mr. Hunt and Mr. Stone whether these figures would be available within the next ninety days, and they said no.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, then, it might be that the committee could not report in time for the pending apportionment bill; but whenever they do report it will be proper to act upon the information.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly; but I have promised to yield next to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McDERMOTT].

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the Constitution provides that the apportionment of representation in this House shall be made upon the basis of those voters who have these qualifications: That they are citizens of the United States; that they are citizens of the State wherein they vote; that they are males 21 years old; and it is further provided that the representation of any State in this House shall be curtailed in accordance with the number of persons having these qualifications who are denied the right to vote. Now, I ask the gentleman if there is any State in this Union where a man is entitled to vote merely upon probate of the fact that he is 21 years old, that he is a citizen of the United States, a citizen of the State where he claims the right to vote, and that he has not been convicted of crime? Is there any State in this Union in which there are not additional qualifications required when the voter presents himself at the ballot box to exercise the elective franchise?

Mr. PEARSON. In North Carolina there are about ten more requirements.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In that connection I want to ask——

Mr. OLMSTED. In answer to the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. McDERMOTT], allow me to say that it is the object of this resolution to inquire into that very subject.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The question I want to ask is whether it is possible through any agency to obtain an answer to these interrogatories. In Ohio it is requisite for a person desiring to vote, if he is the head of a family, to have resided in the State one year and in the county thirty days; while if he is an unmarried person he must have resided one year in the State, thirty days in the county, and twenty days in the ward or precinct in which he offers to vote. Now, is there any way to ascertain how many men were by those provisions of law disfranchised in the Presidential election of last fall?

Mr. OLMSTED. It will be perhaps one of the duties of this committee to ascertain that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But can it be done? Many men stay at home on election day.

Mr. PEARSON. Could not the resolution be amended in such a way as to confine the inquiries to matters possible of ascertainment?

Mr. OLMSTED. If gentlemen will excuse me, I do not wish to use up all my time in answering these interrogatories.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ten minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. The committee will undoubtedly find that there are certain qualifications required by all the States. So far as the required qualifications are common to all the States, that matter will of course make no difference in the representation in this House; but where there are special restrictions, existing in some States and not in others, I have no doubt that it is the duty of Congress to inquire how far such restrictions exist and to put into operation the provisions of the Constitution applicable in such cases.

Take, for instance, the State of Mississippi. I mention it, not because I have any particular feeling in reference to that State, but simply because I am more familiar with the provisions of its constitution than with the constitutional provisions of other States. Mississippi came back to representation in this House in 1870 under an act of Congress which approved its then existing constitution and imposed a condition that suffrage should not be to any greater extent restricted in that State. Some twenty years later Mississippi adopted a new constitution which, as appears upon its face, cuts out from the right of voting those unable to read or interpret the Constitution, a part of which is written in Latin. Now, it is contended on behalf of the State of Mississippi that the act of Congress of 1870 imposing those conditions was unconstitutional. But if the State of Mississippi invokes the Constitution to enable it to deny suffrage, why should not the plain mandate of the Constitution be enforced so as to reduce representation to the extent that suffrage is thus denied?

It is the plain intention of the Constitution that where there is a large wholesale restriction in the right of suffrage those people who are permitted to vote shall not have the force and influence of their votes augmented by permitting them to elect more members of Congress and more Presidential electors than the same number of people in any other State, and it is simply to enable us to ascertain the facts, if possible, that this resolution is offered. Of course, if the committee can not ascertain facts to enable this House to act, then nothing comes of it; but if the data can be had to enable us to carry out the obligation of the Constitution upon us, then this report will disclose that fact, and it will be for the House to consider what action is necessary to be taken.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time has the gentleman consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes the issues involved in this case can not be discussed. I was in hopes that this question would not come up at this session of Congress. When the fourteenth amendment was originally adopted, it was the intention of the legislative body that enacted it and of the people who ratified it to force the Southern people to give the elective franchise to the negro. That was the real purpose of the fourteenth amendment. It failed in that purpose. The fifteenth amendment was adopted for the same purpose. That was successful for the time being. It has proved a lamentable mistake, not only to the people of the South, but to the people of the North; not only to the Democratic party, but to the Republican party.

The time has now come when the bitterness of civil strife has passed. The people of the South, with fairness and justice to themselves and fairness to that race that has been forced among them—the negro race—are attempting to work away from those conditions; not to oppress or to put their foot on the neck of the negro race, but to protect their homes and their property against misgovernment and at the same time give this inferior race a chance to grow up and acquire their civilization. When you bring this resolution before this House and thrust it as a firebrand into the legislation here, you do more injury to the negro race of the South than any man has done since the fifteenth amendment was originally enacted. I tell you, sirs, there is but one way to solve this problem. You gentlemen of the North, who do not live among them and do not know the conditions, can not solve it. We of the South are trying, as God is our judge, to solve it fairly to both races. It can not be done in a day or a week; and I appeal to you, if you are in favor of the upbuilding of the negro race; if you are in favor of honest governments in the Southern States; if you are willing to let us protect our homes and our property—yes, and the investments that you have brought there among us—then I say to you let us send this resolution to a committee where it may die and never be heard of again. When we have done that, when we have worked out the problem and put it upon a fair basis, then, if we are getting more representation than we are entitled to, five or six or ten years from now——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will you permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one moment, when I finish. Then in six or ten years from now come to us with the proposition fairly to repeal both the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments and substitute in their place a constitutional amendment that will put representation on a basis that we can all agree is fair and equitable. Do not let us drive it along party lines. Let party lines be eliminated. Let us see what we have got to do in the South first. It is not going to hurt you to-day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the objection is raised to this resolution that it will be impossible to obtain a comprehensible report under it. That is true. It provides that the committee shall investigate and report in what States certain conditions exist. Now, that does not make it incumbent upon the committee to examine the conditions in every State that regulates the use of the suffrage. The proposition should rather be a negative than an affirmative one, and the resolution which I hold in my hand, as a substitute, would, in my opinion, reach the heart of the matter and enable an intelligent report to be presented to this House. There is not a State in this Union that has not added to or subtracted from the Federal constitutional requirements—not one. Take the State of Pennsylvania, represented in part by the introducer of this resolution.

The constitution of that State, Article VIII, section 1, provides that—

> Every male citizen 21 years of age, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections:
> First. He shall have been a citizen of the United States at least one month.

That is more than being 21 years old and a citizen of the State and of the United States.

> Second. He shall have resided in the State one year (or if, having previously been a qualified elector or native-born citizen of the State, he shall have removed therefrom and returned, then six months) immediately preceding the election.

That is another qualification. It is not a matter of police regulation, but a constitutional inhibition against him who has not the qualification. What next?

> Third. He shall have resided in the election district where he shall offer to vote at least two months immediately preceding the election.
> Fourth. If 22 years of age or upward, he shall have paid within two years a State or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months, and paid at least one month, before the election.

This is the provision under the constitution of 1873. There may have been amendments adopted since. There may have been a revision of the constitution, but that constitution was adopted after the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments had been made to the Federal Constitution.

So in every State in this Union there are either additions to or subtractions from the Federal constitutional requirements that must precede the right to vote. I think the work of the committee can be simplified therefore by this proposition, which, after the vote is taken on this resolution, I shall, if the resolution is adopted, offer as a privileged resolution:

> Resolved, That said Committee on the Twelfth Census shall report in what States citizens are allowed to vote at all elections for Presidential electors and for members of the legislatures of such States upon the only qualifications that such citizens are 21 years of age and male citizens of the State and of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any addition, whether as a matter of police regulation or otherwise, to the constitutional amendments regulating the franchise and the resultant representation in this House—if there is addition or subtraction of one iota—then those who desire to live up to this Constitution, no matter whether they ruin their neighbors, no matter whether they again kindle the fires of sectional strife, those who in their love for the Constitution are so mentally rigid that they would demand its enforcement though they set the Union aflame, must include every State in this Union. Let the investigation be not in the line of sectional partisanship, but let it determine whether there is a State in the Union that lives up to this constitutional requirement. I venture to say, with some familiarity with this question, after some research as to the qualifications that the different States impose upon voters, that there is not a State in the Union that, under that constitutional amendment, is entitled to a single representative in the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is not without significance that the preamble to this resolution selects three States in the Union and names them only as the States against which the resolution is ostensibly directed, and that these three are Southern States. It would have been easy for the gentleman who drew it up to have mentioned all the States in the Union which provide for an educational qualification, for a poll-tax qualification, or for other restrictions upon the suffrage not contemplated in the amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I can tell the gentleman that within the last two or three years a few men down South have been misled by the siren voice, and have begun to believe that they could hope for justice and broad-minded nonpartisanship from the Republican party. They have been warned that whenever power came in sufficient abundance the cloven hoof would come, too, and that they would see that the voice they were beginning to hear was but a siren voice, and that the Republican party would show itself to be still what it hitherto has always been politically—the black man's party in the South and the enemy of the white man, of his civilization, of his commerce, of his property, and of all that has made him what he is. It remains for the gentlemen on the other side to follow the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] if they choose, and completely pluck from the eyes of those who have been partially deceived the veil which has been attempted to be thrown over them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that is more remarkable about this resolution than its evident sectional animus, it is its impracticability and its stupidity. For example, how would anybody find out how many people in the State of Mississippi were disfranchised for the reasons stated in this resolution? There is there an educational qualification. How are you to determine how many of the men in the State of Mississippi who did not vote, did not vote because they were disfranchised under the educational qualification? Then there is a qualification in extension and not in limitation of the suffrage, saying that even those who can not read and write may still vote, provided they can give an understanding interpretation of the Constitution or any part of it. How are you going to determine how many are disqualified by that? And then there is a qualification which says that those can not vote who shall not by a certain time have paid their poll tax.

Out of the number of people who did not vote, how are you going to determine which of them have not voted because of the educational qualification? Which because of the understanding qualification? Which because of the poll-tax qualification? Which because of the registration qualification? How many because of the pure Australian ballot which exists in the State of Mississippi? As the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. MCDERMOTT] has well said but a moment ago, there is not a State in the Union which does not restrict manhood suffrage in some way or other. There is not a State in the Union which has the Australian ballot which by the very fact and the necessity of voting according to that Australian ballot does not prevent the citizen who can not read and write from voting if he votes a split ticket of any sort.

If it be the pure Australian ballot, as we have it in Mississippi, whether a man be allowed to vote when he can read or not, as a matter of fact he can not vote unless he can read, because he must read the names of those for whom he desires to vote, and he must put the mark opposite the name on the ticket.

Mr. CURTIS. Is he not assisted by the judge or clerk?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not in Mississippi, unless he is blind or has lost an arm, or is otherwise physically unable.

Mr. CURTIS. In Kansas such voters are assisted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). In short, can not see to write or feel to write.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. My colleague will allow me. If he is disqualified by reason of any physical disability, then he is assisted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If any physical disability renders it impossible for him to do the work required, he is assisted. That is the pure Australian ballot as it at first came here.

Now, a word as to the merits of this question. Any man who is a lover of the American Republic and who loves its civilization, who loves to see it go forward in the world as a great advance power, intellectually and otherwise, ought to be glad in his heart that we have resorted to constitutional and legal methods—methods adopted in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and other States in this Union—for the purpose of solving as best we could a great and troublesome, if not insoluble, problem. He ought to be glad to see intelligence in control of our destiny.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My time has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ].

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker, coming from the good old State of North Carolina, one of the original thirteen, loyal as I believe myself to be, and as I know her people to be, to the flag that hangs behind the Speaker's desk, desiring only the greatness and glory of the whole country and the prosperity of all its people, for one I regret, with the gentlemen who have preceded me on this side of the House, that such a firebrand should have been thrown into legislation at this time. I regret that the opening days of the new century and the era of good feelings between all sections should be marred by this attempt to reopen sectional bitterness for purely partisan effect. I want to add to what has been so well said by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT], enforced by his reciting the constitutional requirements in Pennsylvania—that there is not a single State in this Union, North or South, East or West, Democratic or Republican, which limits the constitutional requirements for suffrage so as to conform to the language of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

To live up to that amendment, "that no male inhabitant shall be deprived of suffrage except for participation in the rebellion or other crimes," the male inhabitant, I take it, is he who has acquired domicile in that State, and the moment that he acquires domicile, and is a male, he is a "male inhabitant" of that State, and entitled at once to suffrage; and yet every State in the Union, I believe without exception, has requirements as to residence not only in the State, but in the city, in the county, in the precinct and ward, and the voting place; and every one of those requirements, as every gentleman on that side must admit, are in direct conflict with and contravention of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States literally construed.

I find that the States of Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Colorado, and Wyoming all have an educational qualification in addition to the requirement for residence. I find that Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, and Tennessee have a provision requiring the payment of a tax; and I find that some of those States—Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, and New Jersey—have qualifications which exclude paupers, men upon whom God has laid His hand, who are unable to pay a tax and are compelled to go to homes for the poor—that these men in these States are excluded from the suffrage. I find that in Rhode Island there is a property qualification. I find in Delaware that no man can vote unless he has paid a registration fee of $1.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I deny for New Jersey that she denies anyone the right of suffrage or denies that right to any American citizen.

Mr. KLUTTZ. New Jersey has a qualification, as I have stated.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I desire to correct my colleague from New Jersey. New Jersey does deny the right of any pauper to vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I deny the proposition, and ask the gentleman to produce the proof.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I decline to yield to the gentleman to make a speech in my time, but I shall insert in my remarks the provision of the constitution of New Jersey, kindly handed me by the gentleman from that State [Mr. MCDERMOTT]. It is as follows:

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. And no pauper, idiot, or insane person * * * shall enjoy the right of an elector.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] is, I trust, answered.

Now, sir, I come from the State of North Carolina, where we are trying in good faith, in the fear of God, and with the desire to do justice to all our people, to work out the best interests of all races. I find that in North Carolina in the last election, where we have nine Congressional districts, there was an average of 32,555 votes in each district, showing that there was no suppression of the vote.

I find from the reports of the auditor of that State recently made that the total revenues of North Carolina for 1899 from all sources were $3,064,460.52, and of this sum $1,555,000, or more than one-half of it, was given to the cause of education, and that money was given pro rata with the whites to the education of the colored race at our doors, although they contributed but about 10 per cent of the taxes. I ask the majority to join us in frowning upon all such legislation as is proposed in this resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that in the few remarks I made on the resolution I did not discuss the question of negro suffrage at all. That is one that has been raised on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We all know what you meant. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. It is the result of the guilty conscience, Mr. Speaker. It is a matter of surprise to me that the learned and distinguished gentlemen who occupied so much time of the House at the last session endeavoring to show that the Constitution follows into distant islands of the sea and wherever the flag goes should be unwilling that the Constitution should have an opportunity to do business at home. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Why, in one of these States—South Carolina—there is a gentleman sitting here to-day who received 1,768 votes. There must have been some denial of suffrage to somebody. There are seven members from Mississippi sitting here who received 22,365 votes, about the majority in my district this year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman say that these are all the qualified voters in the State of Mississippi? Why, I have 20,000 Democratic white voters on my mailing list.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the object of this resolution, to find out whether they are registered and qualified voters. What is the gentleman afraid of? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to consume longer time upon this resolution. I find there are a large number of my friends on this side of the House who voted with me for the previous question, which, under the rule, limits debate to twenty minutes on either side, but nevertheless feel that they ought to have had an opportunity to discuss it at some length. Some of them claim to have been put in an embarrassing position by the failure to have an opportunity to discuss it. While I am not willing to accept the suggestion from the other side, to refer it to a committee, where it will die for the present and slumber forever afterwards, as the gentleman from Alabama expressed it [laughter], I am willing myself to move to refer it to the Committee on Census if the chairman of that committee, who is present here, will assure me that he will call his committee together for its consideration within a week.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am not in the mood to-day to make any bargains with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I can say to him that the Committee on Census, up to date, has endeavored to discharge its duty with all business that has been referred to it; and I have no doubt that if this resolution is sent there the committee will act upon it as they have upon all other matters that in the regular course of business is assigned to that committee. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to have the gentleman go further and state that he will—I have no doubt that he will—call it up immediately. But, Mr. Speaker, with the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on Census that his committee is prompt in the discharge of business and that this will be called up at an early day, I move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Census.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman closed his remarks?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have, and made the motion.

Mr. MAHON. I think, as this is a privileged resolution, the gentleman himself, if the committee does not act within ten days, will have the right to call it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that debate is closed upon this question.

Mr. OLMSTED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. This being a privileged resolution, will it be within my power to call it up after seven days if the committee does not act upon it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the Chair will not answer questions which are merely going fishing. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I have no doubt the gentleman who occupies the chair when that time comes will decide that question. The question now is on referring to the Committee on Census the pending resolution.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 163. An act for the relief of Henry O. Morse.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print and deliver to the Department of the Interior, for the use of the Commissioner of Pensions, 10,000 additional copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States is hereby requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 2955) entitled "An act providing for the resurvey of township No. 8, of range No. 30 west, of the State of Nebraska," in order to correct an error whereby the bill has been enrolled as an act of the first instead of the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print and deliver to the Department of the Interior, for the use of the Commissioner of Pensions, 10,000 additional copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900—

to the Committee on Printing.

REAPPORTIONMENT.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on behalf of the Committee on Census, to call up for present consideration House bill 12740; and I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I simply call it up to-day for the purpose of general debate, and if the bill is considered now I will not call the previous question until Monday, having general debate to-day and Saturday, and for such time on Monday as may be deemed proper, so that we can get a final vote on the bill some time before the adjournment of the House on that day.

The object of that is this: Thirty-six different State legislatures meet this month. By constitutional limitation the session of some of these legislatures will expire within sixty days. After this bill is considered in the House it must go to the Senate, where necessarily its consideration will take time, so that it is important not only to members of the Committee on the Census, but to every member of this House on either side, that an early consideration of the bill be had.

Many members of the House have not analyzed the three bills pending—the bill reported by the Committee on the Census, the bill reported by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. It is my purpose, if we take up the bill at the present time, to analyze these different bills, giving some facts and figures for the benefit of members who are not on the committee, so that they may better understand this question and may be prepared to vote intelligently, when the time shall come, on the several pending bills which will be pending upon the report of the committee and the amendments that will be proposed by the minority of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SWANSON. To see whether we can not have some kind of an understanding with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] as to the time when this bill shall be taken up; and if not, I wish to raise the question of consideration on the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia raise the question of consideration?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, sir; I desire to raise that question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, without any discourtesy to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], allow me to say I noticed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRIFFITH] sought the floor; and I think it might assist us somewhat in reaching an agreement if that gentleman, a Democratic member of the committee, be accorded recognition by the Chair at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRIFFITH] is recognized.

Mr. GRIFFITH. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], allow me to say that I think it proper to take up this matter now; but I believe that if we should fix Monday for taking the vote it would not allow sufficient time for discussion. There is a very general desire on the part of members who favor what is known as the Hopkins bill, as well as those who favor what is called the Burleigh bill, to discuss both features of this question. I am satisfied that if the previous question should be called on Monday a great many who desire to be heard and who wish to advance special reasons in favor of certain measures would not have the opportunity to do so. I therefore suggest that the vote be taken, say, on Wednesday next at 1 o'clock; that the previous question be considered as ordered for that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, that would allow five days for discussion.

A MEMBER. Four days.

Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me to say that of course this bill will be under the control of the House at every stage of its consideration from the moment it is taken up till the time that some bill on the subject passes this House. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that it is not my purpose to ask for the previous question until some time on Monday—at what hour I am not able at the present time to state. It is not my purpose, however, to cut off any member who may have anything to present that will enlighten the House as to the proper ratio to be adopted, or upon any other provision that may be contained in the bill. I think it will be better, in the interest of legislation, that we proceed in the manner I have already indicated. It may be that by this time on Monday afternoon all members will be satisfied that we shall take a vote some time during that afternoon. If, however, it should be found that we can not do that, the matter will be absolutely under the control of the House.

Mr. GRIFFITH. I suggest to the gentleman that, as a matter of compromise, we fix Tuesday at, say, 3 o'clock.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the gentleman that it would be fairer to all parties not to set a definite time, either Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman from Illinois will allow me to suggest that the shortest time ever allowed in this body for the discussion of an important question of this character was, as I understand, ten years ago, when two full days of debate were allowed, although the report of the committee was unanimous. These questions heretofore have sometimes run on through two years or two Congresses. There has never been a more important question presented in this body than that presented in the Crumpacker bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the consensus of opinion on both sides of the House is that Tuesday at 2 o'clock would be a proper time to call the previous question, I will say to my friend from Indiana that I will not call the previous question before that hour—that we may have debate up to that time.

Mr. SWANSON. Make it 3 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNE. Two o'clock will give time on that day for a speech of one hour on each side.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that, by unanimous consent, the bill which I have called up may be considered in general debate from this time until Tuesday at 2 o'clock, when the previous question shall be considered as ordered and the House proceed to vote upon the various amendments that may be offered to the bill and upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman will allow me to say that under the agreement which he proposes there will be no debate whatever under the five-minute rule. Would it not be well to have general debate until 3 o'clock Monday and then the five-minute debate until 3 o'clock on Tuesday? If the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Illinois be acceptable to the minority members of the committee, I shall not interpose any objection, but it will leave us absolutely without any opportunity to debate amendments, and that is something I have never seen done here.

Mr. HAY. Which bill does the gentleman from Tennessee favor, the Hopkins bill or the Burleigh bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not know that I am prepared to answer that question. I am speaking only for myself——

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman from Tennessee will give me his attention for a moment, I wish to say that so far as the members of the committee are concerned, they would be perfectly willing that a part of the time for debate be occupied under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] yield to his colleague?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MANN. I should like to inquire from my colleague if he has made any arrangement with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who filed minority suggestions, in reference to the time for closing debate?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have a telegram from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], received a few moments ago, in answer to a telegram that I sent him saying that we would proceed with the debate to-day and to-morrow and up to 2 o'clock Monday, in which he states that he will be here this evening, so that he will be in the House to-morrow——

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. MANN. If an arrangement can be made so that the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Indiana is a member of the committee and will be entitled to his time.

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to make an inquiry, either of the Chair or of the chairman of the committee, and that is whether or not, under this arrangement, amendments to this bill can be offered and debated?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No suggestion has been made yet by the chairman of the committee——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want that information now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOPKINS. It is my intention to have it arranged so that amendments can be offered. I have no desire to cut off any amendments that will fairly express the opinion of the House, and whether it be the number that is reported by the majority or by the minority, or some number that may be selected by gentlemen on the floor is a matter of no importance to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know definitely now is whether an amendment can be offered and debated, because I have one that I want to offer to have the District of Columbia have a Delegate in this House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That would not be pertinent.

Mr. PAYNE. That would not be germane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care whether it is or not. I want to offer it if I can have the opportunity.

Mr. HOPKINS. I very much doubt whether that would be proper under the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not your bill provide for Delegates from Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, and Hawaii?

Mr. HOPKINS. I misunderstood the gentleman. I thought he said he wished to offer an amendment giving the District of Columbia a Member. His proposition is to give the District of Columbia a Territorial Delegate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A Territorial Delegate; yes.

Mr. SHATTUC. You would have to have a law to do that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that I have no objection to giving him an opportunity to offer such an amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois and the House will indulge me for a moment, if we make an agreement that this bill shall be debated under general debate until 3 o'clock Tuesday and that a vote shall be taken, why, then, there can be no offering of amendments and no discussion of amendments, and that is the only point to which I desire to call the attention of the House. If we can make an agreement to fix a time at which it will be in order to offer and debate amendments, that is all I desire.

Mr. HOPKINS. When I was interrupted by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who objects to any time being fixed, I was about to say to the gentleman that I was willing to modify that so that we could take a certain portion of the time for general debate and then the other portion under the five-minute rule, which I think myself is preferable to using up all the time in general debate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for just one moment? I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] if it is not his understanding with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], who represents the minority, that the minority bill shall be understood to be pending as a substitute for the proposition of the majority?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Whenever the debate is ended, that the proposition of the gentleman from Maine shall be pending?

Mr. PEARSON. And the Crumpacker bill will be an amendment to that?

Mr. HOPKINS. And the Crumpacker bill, I suppose, will be an amendment to that. It will be arranged so that a vote can be taken on that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the minority bill presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is in order first as a substitute for the majority bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. As a substitute for the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, inasmuch as the gentleman has arranged for the debate to close on Tuesday, or at least has suggested that he is willing to agree to that, I wish to ask him whether it would not be better to allow the debate to begin on Monday and to close on Tuesday instead of beginning the debate to-day and occupying to-morrow and Monday?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say in answer to the gentleman that it has been suggested that more debate should be allowed, and inasmuch as many of the members have not had an opportunity to make a careful analysis of the bills, I think, in the interest of progress in the development of this bill, debate ought to begin to-day so as to analyze the bills. I am prepared to present the views of the majority as to the character of the majority bill, and I am also prepared to show why the House should not adopt the so-called Burleigh bill; and I suppose that my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is equally prepared to show the shortcomings of the committee bill and to exploit the benefits and glories of the Burleigh bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman allow this further suggestion? The gentleman is full well aware that there are some members of the minority of the committee who are not here as yet.

Mr. STEELE. That is not the fault of the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I know it is not the fault of the House; but then, so far as the committee are concerned, in fairness and courtesy they ought to be here and to have an opportunity to hear this debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. It will all be in the RECORD.

Mr. MAHON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] will not forget that this is a short session of Congress and that there is a large amount of business to be transacted.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I trust I shall not forget anything so obvious as that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is the reading of the bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12740) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Twelfth Census.

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 3d of March, 1903, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 357 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

Alabama, 9; Arkansas, 6; California, 7; Colorado, 2; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 11; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 23; Indiana, 12; Iowa, 11; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 10; Louisiana, 7; Maine, 3; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 13; Michigan, 12; Minnesota, 8; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 15; Montana, 1; Nebraska, 5; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 9; New York, 35; North Carolina, 9; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 20; Oregon, 2; Pennsylvania, 30; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 6; South Dakota, 2; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 15; Utah, 1; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 9; Washington, 2; West Virginia, 5; Wisconsin, 10; Wyoming, 1.

SEC. 2. That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be in addition to the number 357.

SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment, the number to which such State may be entitled in the Fifty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants. The said districts shall be equal to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative.

SEC. 4. That in case of an increase in the number of Representatives which may be given to any State under this apportionment such additional Representative or Representatives shall be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives by the districts now prescribed by law until the legislature of such State, in the manner herein prescribed, shall redistrict such State; and if there be no increase in the number of Representatives from a State the Representatives thereof shall be elected from the districts now prescribed by law until such State be redistricted as herein prescribed by the legislature of said State; and if the number hereby provided for shall in any State be less than it was before the change hereby made, then the whole number to such State hereby provided for shall be elected at large, unless the legislatures of said States have provided or shall otherwise provide before the time fixed by law for the next election of Representatives therein.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 14, page 2, after the word "contiguous," insert the words "and compact."

Mr. HOPKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, if he will yield for a moment, whether there is any arrangement or understanding as to who controls the time on either side?

Mr. HOPKINS. No arrangement has been made with the House, but in discussing the matter with the members of the Census Committee it has been suggested that the chairman of the committee control it in favor of the committee bill and that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] control the time in opposition, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided and that it be controlled as indicated.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. PEARSON. I object in behalf——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House, it is not my purpose to devote very much time to general remarks. As every member understands, the authority for the proposed legislation is found in the constitutional requirement, which reads as follows:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

The bill as prepared by the majority of the committee is in obedience to that provision of the Constitution which directs that representation and direct taxation shall be apportioned equitably among the people of the various States.

In the preparation of the bill we were necessarily required to investigate what had been done by previous committees under various censuses that have been taken since the adoption of the Constitution. We find that in the early history they adopted a ratio of population that was to determine the number of Representatives that should be found in the several States.

For example, they would take 33,000 as representing a district that would be entitled to a member of Congress, and then would take the aggregate population of the State and use 33,000 as the divisor, and the quotient would represent the number of Congressmen that would be allowed to the State. No attention whatever was given to fractions. This was so in the first few censuses taken, and was carried on even up to 1840; but in 1832 a notable debate was had both in the House and in the Senate upon this subject.

It was found that as new States were added and the population of the various States increased, that there were large fractions in each one of those States that were unrepresented, and it was finally determined that some legislation should be adopted for the representation of these fractions. Under the census taken in 1830 the House pursued in the preparation of the bill for apportionment the old method that had been adopted in the first apportionment bill. When it was sent to the Senate such inequalities existed and such manifest injustice was apparent that the Senate prepared and adopted a bill based on an entirely different theory.

Mr. Webster was then in the Senate and was upon the Census Committee of the Senate. He insisted that representation and taxation required, in order to make a proper distribution of political power among the States, that a definite number should be determined on as to the membership of the House, that the aggregate population of the United States should be divided by that number, and the quotient thus obtained would be the ratio that should determine the membership in each State, allowing, however, a member for a major fraction.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, right in that connection, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am somewhat in sympathy with your bill, and I think if one injustice was corrected in it I would be with the whole of your bill if it is rectified in this particular. Now, here is Colorado which has a major fraction of 121,000 and something, Florida has a major fraction of 110,000 and something, and North Dakota a major fraction of 105,000 and something, but they do not get an additional Representative for these major fractions. Why not, now, make the House 360, as it virtually is now, and give to these three States their additional members. Then you would give every State that has a major fraction one member, taken as a divisor for the additional member. It seems to me that that would make your bill mathematically perfect, and correct an injustice which has been done these States.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Speaker, that that subject is one that has been carefully considered by the committee, and during the progress of my remarks I propose to take up that question and discuss it, and shall state why our Committee on the Census were not constrained to increase the number beyond 357.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a fact, as stated by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One word more. Is it not a fact that these are the only three States that have a major fraction that do not get an additional Representative?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is the fact that they are the only three that do not get an additional Representative on major fractions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not now; and the reason I do not desire to be interrupted is, I will take up these various objections raised by gentlemen and explain them in the course of my remarks, and I think I can make it clearer to members of the House upon both sides in that way than by these interruptions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman——

Mr. HOPKINS. I have conversed with the gentleman from Colorado, and know his point and what he desires to say, and I will come to it by and by.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, at the time when the Senate, under the leadership of Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts, changed the method of determining the representation of the House, Mr. Polk, who was afterwards President of the United States, as chairman of the Committee on Census of the House, took issue with the action of the Senate and insisted that fractions, under the Constitution, could not be represented at all; that we must take a certain population as the ratio, and that under our Constitution we had no power whatever to make any addition for a fraction.

At that time the views of the Senate were not fully adopted, but from 1840 up to the present time the suggestions first made, as I have indicated, by the Senate upon this subject have been adopted. And for more than sixty years in determining the membership of the House under its apportionment bills an arbitrary number has been taken, and then the fractions have been considered, and a member assigned to each State having a majority fraction.

Now, when we come to take up the bill suggested by the Committee on the Census I will go into this matter more fully than I have at this time. I desire to call the attention of the House briefly, and only briefly, to the reasons that have suggested themselves to the Committee on the Census as to why we have limited the number to 357. I find that the number we have now is an exceedingly large body to transact business, and it was believed in the interests of economy and in the interests of legislation that it would not be wise at this time to increase that number.

Gentleman who have served here in the House for any length of time are aware of the fact that right here in the center of the House are a few favored seats, but those unfortunate enough to get seats on the back rows or on the outer sides of the Chamber are practically excluded from participating in legislation if they remain in their seats. This matter has become so well understood that the strip nearest the west side of the Chamber has been denominated the "Cherokee Strip," and members when they have been selecting their seats have been jeered by the more fortunate members when they have been compelled to take their seats in that section.

Another thing is that people elect members of Congress to come here to legislate; not only to participate in debate, but to take an active interest in all the great questions presented. As the House is constituted, if we increase the number, it will be absolutely impossible to transact the business of the House except by committees. It is too much so at the present time for a healthy condition of legislation. For example, in a few days we shall consider a river and harbor bill which, I understand, carries with it appropriations aggregating from sixty to eighty millions of dollars. Outside of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, what member knows anything about the considerations that have influenced the members of that committee or the reasons warranting an appropriation reaching such enormous figures?

Here the other day an appropriation bill was brought in from the Committee on Appropriations carrying $145,000,000, and was passed in this House in eleven minutes' time. What member of this House, outside of the committee that reported the bill, knows anything about the items covered by it, or can give any facts regarding any of its provisions? This is the condition now. If we increase the membership of the House by thirty or forty members, it will increase the difficulties that I have briefly and imperfectly referred to at the present time.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but in a legislative body with a lesser number we find that the rules are not so severe, and a larger liberty is given to the individual members. We see that in the Senate as compared with the House. There is not a Senator that represents in part any one of the great States that form this grand Republic who rises to his feet but what is entitled to the recognition of the Chair.

How is it in this House? Composed of 357 members, as we have now, let a gentleman with any kind of a resolution, on any subject that interests the public, rise to his feet and address the Chair, and does he get recognition under our rules? Not at all. The question propounded to him is, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?" And it is left for the Speaker to determine whether he shall have recognition to bring that matter before the House or whether he will be compelled to sit down in his seat and wait the action of the Speaker. That can not and ought not to exist in a properly regulated legislative body.

Now, I make no criticism of the present Speaker of the House. I believe he has discharged his duties with an ability and fidelity that entitles him to the highest credit, and his course with every member of this House has been courteous in the extreme; but with this large legislative body we see the trouble and inconvenience to which members are subjected. That is so with 357 members; and if we increase it, we increase the troubles of this kind. Now, you take the committees, and it is the same way. In order to give members of this House proper representation on committees committee after committee has been created that does not meet during the entire session of Congress, and the committees already in existence are increased to such numbers as to make them burdensome and unwieldy; so that I think when members come to look upon this subject in the spirit of patriotism, with the idea of the public good, not from a selfish standpoint, they will agree with the majority of the Committee on the Census that we should call a halt in increasing the membership of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that under the apportionment proposed by the Committee on the Census every one of the great States forming the Federal Republic will have the same relative influence, the same relative power, the same relative representation on this floor that it would have with a larger number of Representatives. Illinois under this bill, with 23 members, will have the same power, the same influence, that she would have with 28 members or with 25, as proposed in the other bill.

The great State of Maine that has honored the country by so many distinguished sons who have served in this House and in the other Chamber will, with three members, as proposed in the bill of the majority, have the same relative influence, the same relative power and position, in this House that she would have with four members. Her representation can not be increased without increasing the representation of all the other States.

If, then, as I have said, we sink the personal ambition of members, if we will throw off the influence that is brought about by localities, and look at this discussion from the standpoint of "the greatest good to the greatest number," and will remember our country and not the individual or the section, it seems to me there ought not to be any division among the members of this House upon the proposition that the membership of this House should not be increased.

There are many other arguments which can be urged in favor of retaining the present number—357. I can well understand why gentlemen desiring to increase the number of Representatives in this House should refer to the English House of Commons with 670 members. But they must remember that in England there is no written constitution to control as there is in the United States. They must remember also that by the rules and regulations of the English House of Commons 40 members of Parliament constitute a quorum for the transaction of public business and 20 members for the transaction of private business.

Then, on the question of economy, England pays to her members of Parliament no salary whatever. She furnishes them no clerks, no stationery, no traveling expenses, no et ceteras such as become a part of the perquisites of every member of the American Congress. Every time we increase the membership of this House we increase the annual expenses of the Government. Gentlemen may say that that is a small matter, but the increase which is proposed in the so-called Burleigh bill will entail an increased annual expense to the Government of the United States of from $500,000 to $750,000. That will be a fixed expenditure which must be met year after year without any resultant good.

Some gentlemen say that in order to transact business and look after our constituents properly it is necessary that the number of Representatives should be increased. I do not agree with gentlemen who take that view, because it seems to me that a careful study of the history of our country will bear out the remark that the legislator of to-day from any of these States has less to do than had his predecessors.

It should not be forgotten that in the earlier days members of Congress had no clerks such as are furnished at the present time. By the introduction of the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, and the great mail system which has been established in this country communication with our constituents is made easy; all sections of our country have been brought into harmony, so that Representatives on this floor can much more readily look after the interests of their constituents than they could before the days of railroads and telegraphs and telephones.

As I have said, these are a few of the considerations which have influenced the majority of the committee in adhering to 357 as the number of Representatives, and recommending the adoption of that number instead of the increase proposed by the minority of the committee.

I now propose, if I can have the attention of the House, to take up bill No. 12740, reported by our committee, and analyze it, showing to members of the House the methods by which we have made the allotments to each of the several States, the total of which aggregates 357 members.

Some time before the convening of Congress the Director of the Census was directed, in accordance with the custom established for many years, to prepare tables not only for the guidance of the Committee on the Census, but also for the benefit of Members and Senators. The experts in that department have prepared a table, called an apportionment table, in which they commence with 350 members and give the figures up to 400 members, inclusive. They first give the constitutional population of every State in the Union and then the constitutional population of the entire United States. By means of these tables we can take any of these figures presented, and if we settle upon any number as the membership of this House, can easily determine the representation that will be allotted thereby to any of the States.

As I have stated, the majority of the committee in preparing their bill selected first 357, and then in order to determine the membership to be allotted to each State under this new apportionment they divided the constitutional population of the United States—74,565,906—by 357, getting a quotient of 208,868, so that under the proposition of the majority of the committee the population of a Congressional district should aggregate 208,868. Taking that number as a divisor, we then took the population of the various States and made the division. For example, dividing the population of Alabama—1,828,697—by 208,868, it gave to the State of Alabama 8 members, with a decimal fraction of 0.755, representing a population of 157,753.

That process was carried out with every State, the aggregate number reached by this process being 335 members; so that by this process we apportion among the several States in the Union 335 members. Now, in order to reach the 357 members, we find that there are 22 members still to be allotted; but we also find that, by the division made in the manner that I have indicated, there were major and minor fractions in the 45 different States aggregating 4,595,126.

Under the old rule that was adopted and maintained in this country up to 1840 that population of 4,595,126 would have gone unrepresented, excepting the four States that under the Constitution are entitled to one member each; but under the policy that has been adopted during the last sixty years these major fractions were represented. It was found, however, that there were major fractions for 25 States instead of 22, including the four States that under the Constitution are entitled to one member each. How was that to be remedied? Under this apportionment 335 members had been assigned to the several States, each on the same ratio that was accorded to its sister States, leaving, as I said, 22 members to be assigned, as I have already stated.

Now, what was the most equitable and just way to dispose of these fractions? The four million and odd thousands that I have mentioned would be entitled only to 22 members, on the ratio that we have already divided among the other States. That aggregation of fractions would not be entitled to 25 members, but only to 22. Now, it would not be in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution to give a greater representation to a fraction than to the integral numbers. It would not be just and proper to take this population that is represented by these various fractions and give them an increased representation. Then what is the most equitable and just way to dispose of the 22 members that represent the fractional numbers?

Why, Mr. Speaker, there is but one way, and that way was pointed out many years ago by Professor Walker, Superintendent of the Ninth and Tenth Censuses. Professor Walker not only agreed fully with the masterly argument that was made by Mr. Webster upon the subject, that we should take an arbitrary number for the membership of the House and have the fractions represented, but he insisted that where such an anomaly existed as we find exists at the present time the only just and proper way would be to take the State with the largest major fraction and give to that State one of the 22 members, then take the next State that had the next highest major fraction and give to it a member, and so on until the 22 members are disposed of in the manner that I have indicated.

Now, these 22 members represent, as I have said, all the fractions, including the population of the four States with one member each; but it is more equitable and just to apportion an additional member to the State with the highest major fraction than it would be to one with a lower major fraction, because when we come to this question of fractions (which frequently occurs, as you will find by going through these figures), one State may have a major fraction of a thousand or two above the moiety number, and another State just reach the dividing line. Where would you make the division there?

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HOPKINS. Just in a moment. Now, I call the attention of the members of the House to this to show that in making this apportionment as has been provided by the Committee on the Census we have been unable to deal out strict and exact justice to all States, but, as Mr. Webster said, the Constitution does not require that. It only requires us to do that as nearly as it is possible to do it in making these divisions. And I submit that when gentlemen come to study these figures as the Committee on the Census have studied them they will readily find that no other apportionment could be made and still preserve the harmony and integrity of the bill.

Now, the gentleman from Mississippi, early in my remarks, suggested that we should recognize the three States that have small major fractions. The moment that we attempt to do that we change the ratio, because you will see under an apportionment of 357 members the ratio is 208,868. Suppose we adopt the suggestion made and give these three States each an additional member.

Then we increase the membership of the House from 357 to 360; and by turning over the leaf and examining the figures that have been prepared by the Committee on the Census we find that, instead of the ratio being the number that I have indicated, it has dropped down to 207,127, and instead of having the membership of the House as it is, at 357, we find that these fractions in the States are changed and that some State other than one of these three that have been indicated would be left exactly in the position now occupied by Florida, North Dakota, and Colorado.

Mr. MORRIS. It would create major fractions in other States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it would create major fractions in other States; and if you will follow this through from one point to another, you will find it will be utterly impossible to have a bill that will prevent that condition arising somewhere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will you explain to the House how it is that if the number of Representatives in the House is 356 Colorado gains a member, or if it is 358 Colorado gains a member, but if it is 357, the number between the two, Colorado does not gain a member?

Mr. PEARSON. That is the "Alabama paradox."

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly it does not require any mathematical genius to explain that. When you have a definite number as a divisor to divide the population of 45 different States, you change the ratio and it changes the fraction and makes the changes that we have indicated. It is what was twenty years ago called the "Alabama paradox."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman recognize, also, that if the membership of the House is reduced to 350 Colorado gains a member; or if it is 351 Colorado gains a member; or if it is 352, or 353, or 354, or 355, or 356, Colorado gains a member; but if it is 357 Colorado does not gain a member?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman would study the figures that have been presented to us by the Director of the Census he would readily see how that occurs; and it illustrates the point that I make and the point that has been a stumbling block ever since we have had apportionment bills under the Constitution of the United States. You can not administer strict, exact, and impartial justice to every State. One State may get a little advantage of another, but the object and purpose of the House in every instance should be to minimize those inequalities, to have a ratio that will apply to the greatest number of States and to give to the States with the largest major fractions, if any such exist, representation, rather than those that have smaller fractions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Right there——

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted. I know what the gentleman's position is and his questions do not throw any light on the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to get some light myself.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then listen to me and do not ask questions.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman should read the speech of "Sunset" Cox on the Alabama paradox, showing that figures never lie.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I do not. Now, Mr. Speaker, right in connection with this subject, and in connection with what the gentleman from Colorado has said, I desire to call to the attention of the members of the House the letter of Francis A. Walker, the Superintendent of the Ninth and Tenth Censuses, written to Mr. Cox, January 15, 1881. It is found on page 24 of the report. I trust every member of the House will read the letter. He says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1881.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request, I would say that I see no correct principle underlying the practice of giving an additional Representative to all States having a moiety of the number of inhabitants taken as the divisor in determining the number of Representatives to which each State shall be entitled under the census. In my view, the only logical method is to take at the outset the final number of Representatives, which number shall be used as a divisor in obtaining the ratio of Representatives to population.

The ratio so obtained should be applied in succession to the population of each State. This process will yield in the aggregate a number somewhat less than the number of Representatives originally taken. The difference should be made up by assigning to the States having the largest fractions additional Representatives. Whenever a sufficient number of additional Representatives have been assigned on account of fractions, to make up the total number taken, such assignment should cease.

If that number be exceeded, as in the case of the assignment of additional Representatives on account of a moiety, the ratio of representation is thereby changed, whether that excess be one or more, a new ratio is determined, and the work has to be done all over again. It might easily happen that upon the new ratio another State would be found to have a fraction in excess of the moiety, and therefore entitled upon the same principle to an additional Representative. The addition of such a Representative, however, giving a new total, would again change the ratio, and the application of that ratio might find still another State in excess of the moiety, and so on.

I inclose a series of tables which afford a practical illustration of this process. In Table I, I have taken 23 communities, which we may assume to be the counties of a State, named A to W, inclusive, having an aggregate population of 120,000. Taking the total number of Representatives at 200, we have 1 Representative to every 600 inhabitants. Applying this ratio in succession to the population of the several counties, we have 190 Representatives assigned upon even division, as appears in column 3, while there is an aggregate of fractions, as shown in column 4, of 6,000. Assigning 10 additional Representatives according to the highest fractions, we have, in column 5, the total 200—the original number of Representatives taken.

Here, according to my view, the work should stop. If, however, assignments are to be made upon a moiety, we find the county named G receiving an additional Representative, its fraction being greater than one-half of 600. The number of Representatives now, however, has become not 200, but 201, and the ratio is no longer 1 to 600, but 1 to 597. Applying the ratio in succession to the population of the several counties, as in Table II, we have an aggregate number of 192 Representatives upon even division, with an aggregate of fractions reaching 5,376. Assigning 9 additional Representatives upon the highest fractions, we have the total number 201, the number last taken, but there still remains one county, U, having a fraction in excess of the moiety.

This county, therefore, upon the moiety principle, must receive an additional Representative, which, however, would make the total number 202 and change the ratio to 1 to 594. Now, if G was entitled to an additional Representative by reason of having a fraction in excess of the moiety of 600, which was not the number of inhabitants to a Representative, U is equally entitled to an additional Representative, because it has a fraction in excess of the moiety of 597, which is the actual number of inhabitants to a Representative. But if U receives an additional Representative on account of its moiety, then the number of Representatives becomes not 201, but 202, and the ratio becomes 1 to 594.

Applying this ratio to the population of the several States in succession, as shown in Table III, we have the number of 194 Representatives assigned upon even division. Giving 8 additional Representatives upon the highest fractions, we have the number of 202, according to the scheme; but this still leaves one county, Q, having a fraction in excess of a moiety of 594. Now, upon the moiety principle, Q has just as good right to have an additional Representative as U or G in the instances previously taken. If, however, this claim is to prevail, the number of Representatives is again changed, namely, to 26, and the ratio is again changed, namely, 1 to 591; a new distribution takes place, as seen in Table IV, and again a claimant for an additional Representative appears in I, which has a fraction of 299, being more than one-half the number (591) of inhabitants to a Representative.

The result of giving I an additional Representative is shown in Table V, where, with a total number of 294 Representatives, yielding the ratio of 1 to 588, there still appears a new county, O, which claims an additional Representative on precisely the same grounds as G, U, Q, or I, namely, as having a fraction equal to a moiety of the number of inhabitants to a Representative. And so this might go on indefinitely.

I see no rational conclusion, therefore, but that the number first taken, through which, as a divisor, to obtain the number of inhabitants for a Representative should be maintained, and so many additional Representatives, and only so many, be assigned upon fractions as are needed to make up the original number. To go beyond this is to lose all hold on any principle governing the matter.

Very respectfully, yours, FRANCIS A. WALKER,
Superintendent of Census.

Hon. S. S. COX,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted any more by the gentleman from Colorado.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the more the members of the House study this question, the fairer will appear the bill suggested by the Committee on the Census. We have absolutely given the same ratio for representation in all of the 45 States, excepting the four States that by the Constitution are entitled to membership although their population falls below the ratio, and then we have taken the fractions, as suggested by this distinguished scientist and statistician, Professor Walker, in a manner that will commend itself to the judgment of every man who is compelled to act in the premises, giving each State that has the highest major fraction a Representative, until the entire number is exhausted.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is impossible to arrive at any more just and equitable system of assigning the membership of this House than the one that has been suggested. If you follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi you create additional inequalities in other States. So that we must take an arbitrary number and be guided by that; and then, when we have exhausted the fractions, as the committee have done in the bill which is reported by our committee, you must stop whether that leaves out Colorado, Florida, or any other State.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to make this inquiry. If I understand the theory of your bill and the basis on which it is made, you allow for all major fractions until you get the requisite number?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And you leave out three that have this major fraction, and of course all with a minority fraction?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the minority fractions are not represented?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; we gave 22 extra men, and I supposed the gentleman understood that. The gentleman is entirely in error. There are 4,595,126 people that are represented by fractions, including the four States with one member each, and are entitled, under the ratio we have adopted, to 22 members. If you allow for more than 22, as I explained earlier in my remarks, you allow the fraction a greater representation than the integral number; and the only question for us to determine is how we are to dispose of the 22 Congressmen that represent the major fractions, including the populations of the States with one member each.

The committee understood it, and I suppose my learned friend from Maine must understand it. The committee believed, with Professor Walker and the present Director of the Census, and all the statisticians and scientists who have given this subject any consideration, that the equitable way to dispose of the fraction is to give a member of Congress to the State having the highest major fraction, and then the next highest major fraction, and so on until the fractions are exhausted by the assignment of members.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, perhaps the gentleman may not have comprehended my question. Upon your explanation, how does the major fraction of Colorado of 121,067 get representation under your bill by a Representative assigned to another State?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will explain that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And on the basis of your calculation, how do all the minor fractions get representation unless by representation of other States?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will explain that further on. It is my purpose to do that.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of 357 members will necessitate a decrease in the membership of some of the States in the Congress that is organized under this apportionment bill, and if gentlemen will turn to page 39 of these tables I have been using during the course of my remarks, they will find the States there losing one are Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Nebraska, Ohio, South Carolina, and Virginia. The States that gain one are Illinois, Louisiana, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, and West Virginia. The State that gains two is Texas. That is on page 39 of the report.

Mr. LLOYD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he made computation to ascertain whether the division is correct in the computation of Colorado as compared with Michigan.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will answer that later on.

Mr. LLOYD. I want to call your attention to the fact that Colorado is entitled to three under that computation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am now speaking of results generally to the various States and the result of the bill as adopted. It has been contended by some that these apportionment bills should be made so that no State shall lose any member; and some have gone so far as to say that in all apportionments no State ever lost any. I have had prepared for the benefit of the House some tables. I find by the list of precedents that it has been but rare since the adoption of the Constitution that we have framed and passed a bill that has continued the representation of all the States.

When the Constitution was adopted it provided for the membership of the States when they became a part of the Federal Union. The first census was taken in 1790. Under that census Georgia lost a member that was allowed to her at the adoption of the Constitution. In 1800, ten years later, an apportionment was provided under which there was no loss, and the same was true of 1810; but in 1820 Connecticut lost a member, Delaware 1, Massachusetts 7, Vermont 1, and Virginia 1, making an aggregate loss of 11.

Under the census of 1830 Maryland lost a member, Massachusetts 1, New Hampshire 1, Virginia 1, making an aggregate loss in those States of 4 members. In 1840, under the Sixth Census, Connecticut lost 1, Georgia 1, Kentucky 3, Maine 1, Maryland 2, Massachusetts 2, New Hampshire 1, New Jersey 1, New York 6, North Carolina 4, Pennsylvania 4, South Carolina 2, Tennessee 2, Vermont 1, and Virginia 6. Under the census of 1850 Maine lost 1, New Hampshire 1, New York 1, South Carolina 1, North Carolina 1, Tennessee 1, Vermont 1, and Virginia 2, making an aggregate loss of 9 to those States under the census of 1850.

In 1860, under the Eighth Census, Alabama lost 1, Georgia 1, Kentucky 1, Maine again lost 1, Maryland 1, New York 2, North Carolina 1, Ohio 2, Pennsylvania 1, South Carolina 2, Tennessee 2, and Virginia 2.

Under the census of 1870—the Ninth Census—New Hampshire lost 1, Vermont 1, Virginia 2.

Under the Tenth Census, of 1880, Maine again lost another member. Under the Eleventh Census, in 1890, they increased the number, as is proposed under the Burleigh bill, so that no State lost a member.

Gentlemen who will examine the tables which have been prepared and made a part of the report of the committee will see that at one time Virginia had 23 members, and then she dwindled down to 9 by successive losses until the last two censuses, when she was again restored to 10. The time was when Maine was represented by 8 members of Congress on this floor. But for forty years Maine has made no advancement in her population to speak of.

I have here a tabulated statement showing the condition of Maine. In 1860 the per cent of increase of population was only 7.7. From 1860 to 1870 she decreased in population as a State. From 1870 to 1880 she increased only 3.5; from 1880 to 1890 only 1.9 per cent, and from 1890 to 1900 only 5 per cent; so that during the forty years or more the population has increased less than 10 per cent.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Will the chairman allow me a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. If Congress had adopted this apportionment of the Eleventh Census, making the number 375 as the number of Representatives upon this floor, would the chairman of this committee be in favor of adopting 375 as the membership of the next Congress? In other words, do you not recommend 357 because that is the present representation in Congress?

Mr. HOPKINS. The committee recommended 357 because they believed that 357 is the limit where the best results for the country can be achieved.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that that number is taken because it is the present number?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not necessarily. That is one of the considerations undoubtedly which entered into the minds of the members of the committee in reporting it. It is not necessarily the controlling element. The point is, as stated by one great French writer, that if you increase a legislative body beyond a certain point it becomes a mob.

Now, we know from experience in this House that you take the capacity of the room, the methods of legislation, and the rules adopted, and we can not increase the membership of the House without detriment to the interests of good legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask if the number is fixed, as provided in the committee bill, at 357, what States will lose a member? As I understand it, Virginia and Maine——

Mr. HOPKINS. And Nebraska, Kansas, Indiana, Ohio, and South Carolina.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would there be any objection under the Constitution, if Congress saw fit to fix the number at 357 and provide that the States of Maine and these other States should not lose a member, and make the number in excess of 357? Is there any constitutional inhibition to that?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman means to add to the States that have lost?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say, fix it at 357 members, as provided in the bill, and say, "Provided, however, that those States (naming them) shall not lose a member, and that the members shall be in excess of 357; so as that no State shall lose."

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that we have no constitutional authority to do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what I am inquiring about.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is upon this principle, that representation and taxation shall go together. Now, if direct tax were imposed, there is no State that would submit to a tax greater than the relation her population bore to the population of the entire United States, and in making our apportionment of members we seek to obtain the same relative proportion between the States as compared with the aggregate population of the entire United States.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. With 357 as a divisor, you have made a ratio of one member for 208,868 of the population, and in doing that you found a number of States with a majority fraction. You have accommodated all those States except three, Colorado, Florida, and North Dakota. Now, could you not, without disturbing the ratio and without greatly increasing the membership of the House, make it 360 and do justice to three States that you deprive of these members, although they have, under the rule of allowing an additional member for a majority fraction, the right to those additional members?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have already explained that situation, I think, fully to the members of the House. If the gentleman will take the figures prepared by the Director of the Census and turn to the ratio of 360 members and run that down, he will see——

Mr. DAVIS. I heard what the gentleman said about that, but what I want to ask is this: Allowing your divisor to remain as it is—357—you make the ratio of 1 Representative to 208,868 of the population, and in making that calculation you find a number of States with majority fractions. You have accommodated all those States except Florida, Colorado, and North Dakota.

Now, without disturbing that calculation—without using any new divisor at all—could you not, in justice to those States earning a member by reason of a majority fraction, add 3 members to your aggregate of 357 without materially adding to the number proposed in your bill? Are you not treating those States unfairly by leaving them out?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am willing to leave that matter to the House. I have already said all I care to say on that point. The House can of course do whatever it may choose on that question. I have shown that there are only 22 members left to represent this aggregation of fractions and that when that number is exhausted the power of the committee in making an allotment is exhausted.

Mr. Speaker, I have called attention to the fact that in reducing the representation of some States we are not starting out upon a new field; that those States which are losing a member, as indicated in the report here, are not suffering anything that their sister States have not been subjected to in the past. Now, who is it that is taking the lead in opposition to the bill of the committee? The gentleman from Maine. Why does he do it? He does it because under the bill reported by our committee the representation of Maine in this House is reduced by one member.

The gentleman from Kansas is another gentleman earnestly in favor of the Burleigh bill and earnestly opposed to the committee bill. Why? Because under the committee bill Kansas will lose a Representative. My honored friend from Nebraska is another gentleman who is opposed to our bill. We find that under the bill as reported by the committee Nebraska will lose a member. In other words, the men who have been acting in opposition to the committee bill—the men who are seeking to prejudice the minds of others against the adoption of that bill—are those whose States under the equitable method and scientific process which I have but briefly and imperfectly stated will suffer a loss of representation in this House to the extent of one member each.

Those States are the States that wish to destroy our bill and present a bill of their own. As I have just shown to the House, the State of Maine has for forty years been nearly stationary in population. It is no discredit to her that the splendid men and women who first see the light of day in that grand old State go to the West to populate and make great the States beyond the Mississippi.

It ought to be an honor instead of a discredit to her that this population of hers has taken a westward course instead of staying up there in the pines of Maine. But is that any reason why Maine should have a greater representation on this floor on the basis of her population than is accorded to the great States of the Union? Is there any code of morals or ethics by which a gentleman from that State is entitled to come here and sit on this floor with a less population back of him than a Representative from Illinois or Pennsylvania or New York? The same thing may be said in the case of Kansas. Let me show you what is the trouble with Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Why not adopt a figure which will take care of all these States without doing injustice to any?

Mr. HOPKINS. The trouble is not with the bill reported by the committee, but with the condition existing in the State of Kansas itself. Kansas has been cursed for ten long years with Populism. Capital has been driven from the State. Energetic, progressive, splendid men who sought homes there have been driven out and gone elsewhere. That young giant, as it was ten years ago, has been a laggard in the race of the States that form the Republic. Fifty-four counties in the State of Kansas during the ten years that the Populists have been in power in that State show a decrease of population.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. I ask that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to finish his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, in 54 counties of the State of Kansas during the last ten years the population has decreased from one-half of 1 per cent to 68 per cent; and taking the entire State it has increased in population only 3 per cent—less than the births of the State.

How is it in the State of Nebraska? Nebraska, lying alongside of Kansas, is suffering not from this bill of the committee, but from Bryanism and Populism in that State. [Laughter.] The same conditions that have stagnated the energy and the enterprise of Kansas are operating in the same way in the State of Nebraska. And I find, Mr. Speaker, the astonishing fact that the district in Nebraska which contains the capital of the State has, during the ten years that Bryan and Populism have been dominant in that community, decreased in population 11,069.

I find also that the Second district, including the city of Omaha, has decreased in population during those ten years 13,996. Thirty-two counties out of a total of 90 in the State of Nebraska show a decrease in population. Now, the States that are making the greatest trouble and the most persistent opposition to the bill of the committee are these States. While I can sympathize with my Republican friends, I know no reason why they should have greater privileges given to them under an apportionment of this kind than are accorded to any other State.

Mr. CURTIS. We do not ask for any favoritism. All we ask is fair treatment. Give us a ratio that will save all the States.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will show the gentleman before I get through that he is favoring a bill that will give special privileges to his State, privileges not accorded to other States. I will show that the gentleman is advocating a bill which can not be defended.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Based on your tables.

Mr. CURTIS. Based on your own tables.

Mr. HOPKINS. I beg your pardon. Now, we will see——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, let us see if they are not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, we will see whether these gentlemen who represent these States that are nonprogressive [laughter], that have not kept up with the procession—we will see, Mr. Speaker, whether they are so exceedingly fair and generous and just to the other States as their language indicates. Facts and figures will determine that. Now, I find by referring to the Burleigh bill that it says that after the 3d day of March, 1903, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 387 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

Alabama, 9; Arkansas, 7; California, 8; Colorado, 3; Connecticut, 5; Delaware, 1; Florida, 3; Georgia, 11; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 25; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 11; Kansas, 8; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 7; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 14; Michigan, 12; Minnesota, 9; Mississippi, 8; Missouri, 16; Montana, 1; Nebraska, 6; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 10; New York, 37; North Carolina, 10; North Dakota, 2; Ohio, 21; Oregon, 2; Pennsylvania, 32; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 7; South Dakota, 2; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 16; Utah, 1; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; Washington, 3; West Virginia, 5; Wisconsin, 11; and Wyoming, 1.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] says that their bill is predicated upon the figures that have been presented by the Director of the Census. I have carefully studied the figures given by the Director of the Census, and I fail to agree with the gentleman. I turn to the same figures I have been discussing in attempting to explain the bill of the committee, and I find that in the so-called Burleigh bill they have given to the State of Nebraska 6 members, whereas under the figures as prepared by the Director of the Census Nebraska is only entitled to 5 members. I find that they have given to the State of Maine 4 members, whereas under the figures prepared by the Director of the Census, under a representation of 386, Maine is only entitled to 3 members.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD and Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will give you an opportunity later on.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman has referred to the wrong computation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not. The gentleman says I am referring to the wrong computation. I will take that up and I will show to the members of the House whether I am right or not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; you have simply stepped from one table to another.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Maine is the one who has been stepping.

Now, let us have no mistake about this. I call the attention of the members of the House again to the so-called Burleigh bill, which declares that the representation in the House shall consist of 386 members. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] who interrupted me says that bill was prepared upon the tables presented by the Director of the Census.

I turn to the tables prepared by the Director of the Census, and under a representation of 386 I find that Maine, under those figures, is entitled to only 3 members, while under the Burleigh bill she is given 4. Where does she get that additional member? I find by running down the figures a little farther that Pennsylvania is entitled to 32 members, with a major fraction of 120,515. Pennsylvania is given nothing for her major fraction and Maine, with a major fraction less than Pennsylvania, is given an additional member.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What table is that?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is the table on page 17. I find that Nebraska is entitled, under this table, to only 5 members, and they have given her 6. Going on down the table, I find that New York is entitled to 38 members, while she is only given 37.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. I will come to you pretty soon.

Mr. LONG. I hope the gentleman will be fair.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman is reading from the wrong table.

Mr. LONG. Certainly; he has deliberately done that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I find that, taking the table prepared by the Director of the Census, these gentlemen who have prepared the Burleigh bill have gone to the State of Pennsylvania and deliberately taken one member from that State, under the basis of 386 members, and given that member to the State of Maine. I find that Maine, entitled under these figures to only 3 members, is given 4 in the Burleigh bill by taking a member from New York. That is the way they get their 386 members.

But gentlemen say that these are the wrong figures; that they are doing their business under the figures 384. Now, when you get the 384, you will find that after exhausting the members that represent the fractional numbers, as was done by the Committee on the Census, Nebraska and Virginia have only 5 and 9 members, and that without rhyme or reason, without any basis whatever, but by the mere exercise of arbitrary force, they add to these States 2 members, making 386, but still say they are figuring on the basis of 384. Now, that can not be done with any degree of justice to the other States, as I am prepared to show you to-day.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will.

Mr. LONG. Are not those majority fractions both in Nebraska and Virginia, and are they not the only majority fractions unrepresented in that table of 384?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, what of that?

Mr. LONG. I ask that as a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly; but what of it?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not your whole theory based on majority fractions?

Mr. HOPKINS. These gentlemen can not dodge the issue by calling attention to the major fractions, because, as I have already shown, if they have done as they say, they have followed the system down through and exhausted the members represented by fractions before they reach Nebraska or Virginia, and then without rhyme or reason they have taken two members and given one to each of those States, and by doing that they make the membership 386.

Now, if you make the membership of this House 386 on the ratio that they propose, the State of New York is entitled to 38 members and the State of Pennsylvania in entitled to 33, while the State of Maine is only entitled to 3 and the State of Nebraska is entitled to only 5; but they give Maine 4 and Nebraska 6.

Now, I want to know if there is a member from New York here who loves the State of Maine so well that he is willing to have his State lose a member to which she is entitled and give that member to the State of Maine? I want to know if there is a member here from the State of Pennsylvania who thinks so much of the grand old Mother of Presidents that he is willing to deprive the State of Pennsylvania of the representation that she is entitled to and give a member to the State of Virginia to which she is not entitled?

So much, Mr. Speaker, for the figures. Now, let us take another view. I undertake to say that a more unfair bill was never presented to any House than the bill that is fathered by the gentleman from Maine. I undertake to say that with their 386 members, as they are figuring it, they have violated the Constitution of the United States and have a separate ratio for every State.

Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of both sides of the House, I desire to show up some of the shortcomings of the Burleigh bill. I desire to show to the members how it is that the gentlemen from Maine who have been seeking to get that bill adopted here are to profit by it, to the detriment of the other States in the Union.

If there is anything that is sacred in this country, it should be an apportionment bill. If there is anything that should approximate equal and exact justice between all the States as nearly as possible, it should be a bill of this kind. And yet I find, when I come to examine the Burleigh bill, as I have stated, that it provides a different ratio for every State. Now, to show to gentlemen that I am not talking without having the facts and figures back of me, I desire to call their attention to those figures.

You will find that the population of the State of Maine under the present census is 694,466 people. They insist that for that population they shall have 4 Representatives in Congress. If that population is entitled to 4 Representatives, then I submit that every other State in the Union with a population of that number should have an equal number of members of Congress. I recognize the ability of the people of Maine; I recognize the splendid position that Maine holds in the Union; but I did not know until the Burleigh bill was presented that a less number of her people were entitled to a member of Congress on this floor than the people of other States in the Union.

Under the Burleigh bill they get 4 members of Congress for 694,466 people. That makes a ratio of population of 173,617. Now, let us see what they do with the larger States. That is the ratio of population for Maine. For the State of Illinois they require us to have a ratio of population of 192,862. For the State of New York they require us in the Burleigh bill to have a ratio of population for every member of Congress of 196,305.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman this——

Mr. HOPKINS. Just a moment. For the State of Pennsylvania they require for every member of Congress a population of 196,941. So that you can see——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman deny that the Burleigh bill, as to which he seems to be so exercised, is made exactly upon a table furnished by the Director of the Census on the basis of 384 members, and that the representation of each State, Illinois and Maine included, is in accordance with his figures on that basis? Do you deny that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you deny that as to Maine or Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not on the stand and do not propose to be cross-examined by the gentleman. I will explain the matter in my own way.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very true.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman sit down?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose so.

Mr. HOPKINS. You can stand if you prefer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will sit if it is not inconvenient to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a matter of indifference to me whether you sit or stand. I do not know what operated upon the mind of the gentleman from Maine in preparing the Burleigh bill. I do not know what figures he had. All that we could do is to take 386 members and analyze and see whether in preparing the Burleigh bill the gentleman from Maine has treated each of the States of the Union as he has treated his own State. I have shown that he proposes that every 173,617 in the State of Maine shall be entitled to a member of Congress.

Now, in the State of Pennsylvania he does not propose that that number shall be entitled to a member of Congress, but that in Pennsylvania they shall have 196,941 people to be entitled to a member. Now, let me carry these figures out and show the injustice that comes from this Burleigh bill. New York is required under the Burleigh bill to have 22,688 more people in every one of the 37 Congressional districts than is required in the 4 districts of Maine. You multiply that by 37, the districts that the Burleigh bill gives, and it makes an aggregate of 839,456 people; a larger population would be without representation, if the ratio was the same as in Maine, than they have now in the State of Maine by nearly 200,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Along that same line, I want to know if it is any more unjust than the results under your bill? [Laughter].

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not yield to the gentleman from Washington to ask me a question on my bill. I am taking up these bills one at a time and am discussing the Burleigh bill now. If he has any question to ask concerning the Burleigh bill, I will answer it.

In analyzing the bill I find that it requires 23,324 more people in every Congressional district in the State of Pennsylvania than in the State of Maine; or, taking the entire State of Pennsylvania, it aggregates a population of 746,368 people that are unrepresented if the ratio should be as the ratio in the State of Maine. Now, how is it in Illinois? I find that in Illinois we are required to have a population of 19,245 more people in every one of the 25 Congressional districts than they have in any one of the Congressional districts in Maine, making an aggregate of more than 481,125. Now, you take these unrepresented people in the three States—New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois—and they aggregate 2,066,945 people who are unrepresented on this ratio in order to allow the little State of Maine to have 4 Representatives in Congress.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I want to know whether you have done just right in your bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. I decline to yield to that question.

Mr. Speaker, my bill is not just at this moment under consideration. I will answer any question relating to the Burleigh bill.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Is not the fact to which you now advert due to the consideration that as the ratio is decreased the major fractions are increased, and consequently larger States have larger aggregate major fractions than the smaller States; and is it not due to that consideration, and for this reason, that you select the large States of New York and Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOPKINS. If Maine is entitled to a member of Congress for 173,617 people, why not make that the ratio? Do you see any objection to that for South Carolina?

Now, what I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, is if 173,000 people in round numbers is sufficient for a member of Congress in Maine, why is not that number good in New York, why not in Illinois, why not in Minnesota, and South Carolina?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If 26,955, which is your basis in Colorado, is good for a Representative there, why not elsewhere?

Mr. HOPKINS. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It depends upon the question asked.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be diverted by any of these outside issues. The gentleman knows very well I am discussing the Burleigh bill, and undertaking to show that it inflicts injustice on the other States. I can understand how an astute lawyer when he has a desperate case that he can not win on the merits will undertake to throw dust in the eyes of the jury by an outside issue.

Mr. LONG. Can not we compare your bill with the Burleigh bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not now.

Mr. LONG. That is not permissible.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I find by calculation that if you allow to New York the same right that is accorded to Maine under the Burleigh bill, if you give her a member for every 173,617 people, and a member for every majority fraction, instead of being entitled to 37 members, New York should have 42 members under this bill. She is deprived of 5 members. I find that Pennsylvania under the same ratio that Maine claims her 4 members, instead of being entitled to 32 members, as is given her in the Burleigh bill, is entitled to 36 members, with a fraction of 51,903 people.

I find that Illinois, under the ratio that the gentleman from Maine proposes for her 4 members of Congress, would be entitled, instead of 25 members, to 28 members, or 27 with a fraction of 133,000, which under their ratio gives 28. In other words, if the Burleigh bill treated New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois as fairly as it treats Maine, and gave them a member of Congress for every 173,000, in round numbers, as they do Maine, 12 additional members of Congress would be added to these three States.

I want to know, if we are dealing fairly with the large States as well as the small ones, why it is that these gentlemen do not make the ratio for the three States I have named the same as they do the ratio for their States?

I will not stop with three States. I have made a computation with some of the other States. I will take up the grand old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, lying right along by the side of Maine, where their interests are almost identical, and where it is supposed that a man in Massachusetts is equal to a man in Maine. I find that under the Burleigh bill only 14 members are assigned to Massachusetts, with a population of 2,805,346 people.

Now, they make the ratio of population in Massachusetts 200,382. In other words, every Congressional district in Massachusetts under the Burleigh bill is required to have 26,765 more people than any of the districts in the State of Maine, and multiplying that by 14, the number of members given Massachusetts in the Burleigh bill, makes 374,710 people unrepresented, on that ratio, in the State of Massachusetts.

The next comparison I have made I want to call to the attention of my friend from Minnesota, who is on the committee, and who has signed the minority report, and who favors the Burleigh bill, Mr. HEATWOLE. Minnesota has a population of 1,949,626. She is allowed in the Burleigh bill 9 members. That makes a ratio of her population for a member 194,403. In other words, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE], who joined his friend from Maine, says to the people of Minnesota that it requires 20,786 more people in a Congressional district in his State to equal a Congressional district of the State of Maine. He says to his people that 187,074 people can go unrepresented in order to give Maine more members.

Now, here we have this young giant from the West, her population increasing in a marvelous manner compared with the State of Maine that for forty years has not increased her population over 10 per cent, and yet representing the committee as he did, he is willing to give a member of Congress in that State for every 173,000 of population where 194,403 is required in the State of Minnesota. And in three years, by the increase of population in that State, that 194,000 will reach 200,000, 205,000, 210,000; and yet, in order that Maine may be taken care of, forgetting the great and growing West, he says the bill proposed by the majority of the committee, that recognizes the rights of Minnesota with all the other States, shall be set aside and this substitute bill, that takes care of the State of Maine, shall be substituted in its stead.

I commend these figures to other members from the State of Minnesota and leave it for them to determine whether Minnesota, which would be entitled to 10 members on the ratio that Maine gets 4, shall be content with 9 as given to it in the Burleigh bill.

Now, something has been said about the State of Ohio under the bill reported by the majority of the committee. That State loses 1 member under the bill that is reported by the majority of the committee. Under the Burleigh bill they have sought to obtain votes from the State of Ohio to support Maine's contention in the Burleigh bill by putting back 1 member and giving her a representation in the next Congress under this apportionment bill of 21 members.

Let us look at the figures and see whether Maine has dealt justly with Ohio. We find that Ohio has a population of 4,157,545. She is given, as I have said, 21 members, requiring a population of 197,978 for every Congressman. In other words, it takes a population of 24,361 more in every district of Ohio than it does in the State of Maine to entitle her to a Representative. Ohio, on the ratio of a population of 173,617, is entitled not to 21 members, as proposed in the Burleigh bill, but to 24 members.

Can anybody say that the great State of Ohio, with her splendid representation on this floor, is not entitled to the same representation on population that the State of Maine is? If Maine is to have 4 members, why not on the same ratio give Ohio 24? Is there any member from Ohio who has been urged to support the Burleigh bill who for a moment would be willing to sacrifice 3 members from that State and give Maine 4 members?

Let me take up another State. Thus far in my analysis of the Burleigh bill I have confined myself to the Northern States. I now call the attention of the members of the South to the State of Texas. Texas has a population of 3,408,710. Under the Burleigh bill she is given a representation of 16 members; but we find that it requires under this representation 16,927 more population in each Congressional district in that State for a Representative to Congress than it does in the State of Maine. Texas, on a ratio of 173,617, is entitled, according to population, to 18 members, instead of 16, as given by the Burleigh bill.

My friend [Mr. BALL] intimated the other day that he would give his support to the Burleigh bill. I want to know whether he is willing to support that bill when he thereby sacrifices two members in the State of Texas. Is there any member from the State of Texas who would be so unjust to that magnificent State of the Southwest as to deprive her, under this ratio, of two members?

Mr. Speaker, I have some more figures here that carry out and illustrate just what I have said. Take the State of Iowa, that is allowed 11 members under the Burleigh bill. She has a population of 2,231,853. Under the Burleigh bill she is required to have a ratio of 202,896. In other words, it takes 29,229 more people for every Congressional district to elect a member of Congress in the State of Iowa under the Burleigh bill than it does in the State of Maine.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I have here House bill 17677—the Burleigh bill, as I understand. Is not that the one which is intended as a substitute for the committee bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. This bill gives Iowa 12 members.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that that is one of the anomalies of the bill. The gentlemen who prepared that bill gave Iowa in the first place 12 members, and then, without rhyme or reason, took one member away from her and proposed to give her only 11.

Mr. LACEY. Is not this the correct print of the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; the substitute which they propose is in the report of the committee. The bill which the gentleman has in his hand represents the arrangement with which those gentlemen first started. This matter furnishes an illustration of the beauties of the Burleigh bill. When those gentlemen thought they could get along without Iowa they cut her down one member, allowing her 11 Representatives instead of 12. But if Iowa is allowed representation on this floor upon the ratio of population which Maine insists upon, she would be entitled, instead of 11 or 12 members, to 13 members.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman certainly means to be fair. I call his attention to the fact that according to this table of 384 members Iowa has not a major fraction, while Virginia and Nebraska have. Certainly the gentleman has read the report of the minority of the committee, in which they state that they take the computation of the Director of the Census on the basis of 384 members, and add these two States because they have majority fractions.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say to the gentleman that he can not lay that flattering unction to my soul, and say that I shall be bound by the 384 computation. I take the bill which says that the representation in this House shall be 386. If the membership is 386, you can not get any such figures as you propose under 384. You can take 384 and make a representation for a part of the House, and then take some arbitrary figures for the rest of your bill that is not in accordance with the principles of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Did not Mr. Webster, in his report, insist that every State with a majority fraction should be accorded a Representative upon that faction?

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman know why?

Mr. LONG. I ask the gentleman whether that is not the fact.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to the gentleman that Mr. Webster, in making that report, found the major fractions were such that there could be an additional member for every major fraction. The contention then was, or at least one of the contentions then was, that there must be some representation for minorities as well as majorities. But at the time Mr. Webster presented his report he fixed a definite number for the House and made the apportionment for the States, and then when the question of taking care of the fractions arose it was found that there would be additional members on that ratio to take care of all the major fractions.

Mr. LONG. Does the gentleman not know that he is misstating the facts in that case?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know I am not.

Mr. LONG. I know you are, and will show it to you.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all right enough, but I know I am not. I have the report in my desk.

Mr. LONG. In regard to 1832?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Webster made his report under the census of 1830.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. When the controversy was between him and the House, and Mr. Polk as chairman of the committee. Now, Mr. Webster did say just what I have said, but the reason that he said so was because in that instance there was a member for every major fraction. Is not that so?

Mr. LONG. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. HOPKINS. Answer my question.

Mr. LONG. I will do it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, do it, then.

Mr. LONG. Under that amendment——

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not that so?

Mr. LONG. It is not so. They started with a House of 250, and by according representatives to every major fraction they reached a House of 251, and the gentleman knows it if he has read the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman may get a little excited over this——

Mr. LONG. I am not a particle excited.

Mr. HOPKINS. But nobody can be misled on a question of that kind. The contention of Mr. Webster, between him and the House at that time, was that fractions should be represented.

Mr. LONG. What kind of fractions?

Mr. HOPKINS. Will you allow me right there for a moment?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Congress up to that time had never recognized fractions in making the apportionment. The great argument that Mr. Webster made was that fractions should be represented, and hence he did use the argument that all of these major fractions should be represented; but as I stated, in making their apportionment they could do that so as to take care of the members, but with a larger number of States, under the representation as we have it at the present time, we have been compelled to adopt the suggestion made by the Superintendent of the Census, Mr. Walker, to apply major fractions until the number of Representatives was exhausted.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. This letter of Mr. Walker's was sent to the House in 1881, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. And in the apportionment of that year and in the apportionment of 1890 it was followed, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Now, in either of those apportionments was any State with a major fraction denied representation on that major fraction?

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman know, just as I have stated to the House, that they increased the number of Representatives? That is the trouble that has been brought upon us at this time. You increase the number so as to take care of all of the major fractions every ten years and this generation will hardly pass away before we shall have a House of five or six hundred members.

We have come to the point where a limit must be made to the membership of the House. But if you follow the suggestion of my friend from Kansas [Mr. LONG] and allow a member for every major fraction, then you must increase it, not in the arbitrary way suggested by the gentleman from Kansas, but by increasing the other States until you reach a point where every State will be taken care of.

Now, if these gentlemen representing the Burleigh bill had followed the suggestion of Mr. Webster in that respect, instead of stopping at 386, as they have in this bill, they would have gone to 395. These figures presented here by the Director of the Census show that you can not reach any number where you can do exact and equal justice to all the States on the same ratio—mark this, on the same ratio—and take care of the major fraction in addition to that short of a membership of 395. Now, is not that correct?

Mr. LONG. The minority of this committee——

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, is not that statement correct?

Mr. LONG. The minority of this committee are following Mr. Webster.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not that statement correct?

Mr. LONG. According to your Walker process, but not according to the Webster process.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it is in accordance with the Webster process.

Mr. LONG. It is not.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no difference——

Mr. LONG. There is a great difference.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no difference between the Walker and Webster system, except this, that at that time, as I stated before, Mr. Webster found that the major fractions could all be taken care of; but that was not the burden of his argument.

The burden of his argument was to convince Congress that the fractions should be taken care of. You will find an elaborate report made by Mr. Polk, in which he produces arguments that are a credit to any man to show that it is unconstitutional to represent fractions at all. Now, if these gentlemen representing the Burleigh bill had sought to be entirely fair to the country, entirely fair to the members of the House, entirely fair to all the States, instead of stopping with 386, just where they could take care of those States that are doing the interrupting here to-day, they would have carried it up to 395. Then every State would have been properly and equitably represented on this floor.

But I judge from the fact that they stopped short of that, that they, as well as the majority of the committee, recognized the fact that we have reached the danger point in matters of legislation in increasing the membership of the House. They recognized that this House has to-day a membership fully as large as we ought to have, consistent with proper legislation. And they have simply adopted some method of figuring, I do not know by what process, by which they can get 386 and take care of their States. But, as I have shown, in doing that they do an injustice to Illinois, they do an injustice to New York, they do an injustice to Pennsylvania, to Iowa, to Indiana, and to all the great States, North and South.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have shown that Iowa was entitled to 2 more members of Congress under the Burleigh bill than have been given to it by the authors of that bill. I now take up the State of Indiana. I am sorry that my good friend [Mr. GRIFFITH] from the minority of the committee, has indorsed the Burleigh bill. I say that instead of being entitled to 13 members, if you were treating your State as well as you treat the State of Maine, instead of being content with 13 members you would insist upon 14.

Do you want to treat the State of Maine better than you treat your own State? Do you believe that it requires a larger population in Indiana to have a member of Congress than it does in the State of Maine? By your vote in support of this minority report you say so. You say to the people of Indiana that they have not the intelligence, the character, the capacity, so that a given number are entitled to the same representation on this floor that you give to the people of the State of Maine.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In reply to that statement I want to say that the Representatives from Indiana—at least part of them—and the people of Indiana have too much sense to pay any attention to the argument made upon the basis you are making it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, that is all right, but I will give you the figures to show that I am right. Indiana has a population of 2,516,465 people, and on the ratio of Maine she would be entitled to 14 members. The gentleman can take that to himself or not, as he pleases.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit, he is taking Maine, where they give 1 member on a major fraction, and is dividing it by 4. Now, if he will take his own bill and take the State of Colorado he can make his own bill just as ridiculous as he is making this. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. And a great deal more so.

Mr. HOPKINS. But I am doing that because the State of Maine insists that she is entitled to 4 members, when by doing that, under a fraction, she takes a member from New York with a larger major fraction than Maine. You may view this from any standpoint, and I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Burleigh bill can not be defended on the representation given to the State of Maine. Under the Burleigh bill Michigan is entitled to 14 members instead of 12; Wisconsin is entitled to 12 instead of 11, and Virginia is entitled to 10 instead of 9. California, with a major fraction, is entitled to one more member than is accorded to her.

The State of South Carolina is entitled to 8, and a fraction of 124,000; and if that 124,000, which is a major fraction under the Burleigh bill, is considered, South Carolina is entitled to 8 members instead of 7; Missouri is entitled to 18 members instead of 16; Kentucky is entitled to 12 instead of 11; New Jersey is entitled to 11 instead of 10; Tennessee is entitled, under that ratio, to 12 instead of 10; Georgia is entitled to 13 instead of 11.

I have not the time to-day to go into an analysis of the Crumpacker bill. Before the close of the debate I shall have some observations to submit upon that, but I desire to wait until Mr. CRUMPACKER has had an opportunity to present his bill.

I have simply taken these tabulated statements to show to the members of the House the necessity of carefully examining the conclusions arrived at in the Burleigh bill. I have shown the inequalities, and that in every State there is a different ratio of population for representation than the one adopted for Maine.

I have undertaken to show, Mr. Speaker, that by the majority bill we have taken a common divisor—208,868—and made it applicable to every State, and that under that divisor equal and exact justice is given to every State in apportioning 335 members. The 22 unassigned members have been apportioned in the manner already explained, as equitably as it is possible to apportion members on fractions.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not a fact, under the report of the majority of the committee, that in the State of Illinois you require 209,632 of a fraction to have a member, while in your bill you require 231,488 to entitle Maine to have 1 member?

Mr. LONG. And Colorado 269,000.

A MEMBER. And Vermont 170,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Gentlemen can go into figures as they choose. This fact stands out prominently, and it can not be gainsaid by discussing the bill, and that is this, that the common divisor is 208,868. We find we have applied it to all States where it is applicable. Now, if there are any inequalities they are inequalities that come under the fact of applying it to the fractions, and the fractions are represented by these 22 members.

Now, if the entire population of the United States were not divided by State lines there would be no trouble whatever. But when I started out in my remarks I undertook to state clearly to the members of the House that it is impossible to do exact justice to every State and have the population represented. My analysis of the two bills has been to show that there are more inequalities presented in the Burleigh bill than are presented in the bill reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You have not made a single analysis of your own bill on the same basis on which you have examined the Burleigh bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have given the figures full and complete.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to detain the House longer. I have simply given these facts and figures here to-day to arouse the attention and the interest of members. They have now the figures that are given to us by the Director of the Census, and every man can go and figure for himself.

My purpose is not so much to have 357 adopted, or 386, or any other number, as it is to call the attention of the members to the importance of the question. I do hope, however, this House will not be carried away by personal solicitation or by arguments of a political nature. I insist that in a great measure like this partisanship should be sunk, that personal interests should be forgotten, and that we should all unite, Democrats and Republicans alike, in framing a bill that will guard the interest of all the States in the most equitable and just manner that can be provided by the intelligence of this House. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be apparent from the questions which have been propounded to the chairman of the committee that there is something radically wrong in the formation of this bill. A bill which provides for representation in this House for the next ten years by the people of the various States of the Union should be most carefully framed.

I have attempted to look into the inequalities of the measure, and I find that they result from the error of adopting a defective system. The system which has been adopted by the chairman of the committee in the formulation of this bill works gross injustice to a number of States in the Union. I call attention first to the wrong which is done to the State of Colorado, because that is perhaps the most apparent. We find, according to the tables that are sent to us by the Director of the Census and upon which this bill is framed, that even if this House is reduced to the membership of 350 Colorado is entitled to an additional member.

If it is fixed at 351, she is entitled to an additional member. If fixed at 353, or 354, or 355, or 356, she is entitled to an additional member. But if the number 357 is picked out, then she is not entitled to an additional member. If the membership of the House goes beyond that to any extent, if it is 358 or 359 or any number up to 400, then she is entitled to an additional member. Out of the two sets of tables that are sent to this House by the Director of the Census, tabulating 100 illustrations, 50 under one system and 50 under another, there is but one number by which Colorado fails to get an additional member, and that is the number fixed by the committee that has brought the bill into this House. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that any bill which is predicated upon a system that admits of an injustice of that kind is radically wrong. I want to call attention to the fact that if the representation is fixed at 213,000 inhabitants and for each major fraction of that number, Colorado is entitled to an additional member. If it is placed at 212,000, or 211,000, or 210,000, or 209,000 and major fraction, she is entitled to an additional member. But if it is fixed at 208,868 and major fraction, she is not. Can any man, according to principles of justice, explain that paradox satisfactorily? Is there any justice in a system that works such a wrong as that?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is what the chairman would not answer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what I tried to get him to answer. It may be that the system works out in mathematics that way; but no man can say it is just that a State which is entitled to an additional member, when its people are entitled to it, according to an apportionment of 213,000, is not entitled to it when that number is reduced to 208,000. There is no justice or fairness in selecting that number, and that is the only number by which Colorado fails to get the representation to which she is entitled.

Now, that is one illustration only as to how this system works. It also works the same with some other States. It works so with the State of Maine. Upon a certain apportionment Maine is entitled to maintain 4 members in this House, and yet upon an increased membership of the House it is not entitled to but 3. If the membership is placed at 383, 384, or 385, Maine is entitled to 4 Representatives, but if fixed at 386, she is entitled to only 3. If placed at 387 or 388, she is again entitled to 4 members, but if fixed at 389 or 390, she is entitled to only 3. "Now you see it and now you don't." Any system that works an injustice of that kind can not be defended by anybody upon principles of equity or fairness. If the State of Maine is entitled to 4 members upon the ratio of 1 Representative to each 194,689 inhabitants and major fraction, she is unquestionably entitled to the same number upon the ratio of 1 member to each 191,194 inhabitants and major fraction.

Mr. GAINES. How is that done; how does it come about?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is done by means of a system which does not recognize that all major fractions are entitled to representation. The details of it are uninteresting. I went to the Census Bureau and told them there must be a mistake in their first set of tables. I saw the gentleman in charge of this compilation. He looked at it and said, "Colorado entitled to an additional member at 350 or 351, and not entitled to one at a membership of 357? That must be a mistake." He looked at it further and said, "I don't know whether it is a mistake or not." He ran over the column of figures, recalculated it, and at last said: "No; it is no mistake." There may be no mistake, but it shows the injustice and unfairness of a bill predicated upon such a system.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How did he explain that it was produced?

Mr. SHAFROTH. He explained it on the same theory that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] attempted to—the shifting of the major fraction upon change of ratio. But he did not claim that it was fair. In fact, he said that it showed a serious defect in the system, and that the Bureau had not recommended any system.

The case of West Virginia is another illustration of the defect of the plan adopted by the committee. According to these tables West Virginia is entitled to 5 members if the membership of the House is placed at 351, or 1 Representative for each 212,438 inhabitants and major fraction, but is entitled to but 4 if the membership is fixed at 352 or 353, or 1 Representative for each 211,834 and major fraction or for each 211,234 and major fraction.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I think it is predicated on a wrong basis, on a wrong theory, and I believe that if such iniquities as I have pointed out in the cases of Colorado, Maine, and West Virginia had appeared among the tables that were presented to Congress in 1850, when this system was first adopted, the Senate and House would have found that the old system of fixing a given number of inhabitants for each Representative and for each major fraction would come nearer doing equity among the States.

This latter system, which forms the basis of the second computation sent here by the Director of the Census, is, it seems to me, as perfect a system as it is possible to devise. The experts of the Census Bureau took a certain number—for instance, 200,000—and divided the population of each State by that number, giving to the State the number of Representatives determined by the quotient and major fraction, if one should result. In that way no State, in representation upon an increasing change of ratio, jumps up at one time and down at another. From the tables formed under this latter system you can not find—I have hunted for it in vain—an illustration such as Colorado, Maine, or West Virginia furnishes under the committee's system. It seems to me that the apportionment bill ought to be predicated upon a system that does not admit of irregularities and injustices such as exist in this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of a smaller ratio of apportionment and a larger House than is proposed by the bill presented by the chairman of the committee. To say that this House is going to cease to be a deliberative body because of 29 or 30 additional members is something that is preposterous. It is absurd to maintain such a proposition. This House is going to be just as much a deliberative body with 30 additional members as it is at the present time. It has not been a deliberative body for fifty years, and it never will be a deliberative body again unless you reduce the membership below 150.

When we observe the legislative bodies of the various nations of the world we are struck with the fact that this body, representing directly the people of the greatest nation on earth, is in fact a much smaller body than that which usually represents the people of other nations. The British House of Commons has a membership of 670, yet that body legislates for only 37,000,000 of people, whereas we legislate for over 75,000,000. And even the British House of Lords has 587 members. The French assemblies are large. France has a population of 38,000,000—just about half the population of the United States—yet the Senate of France consists of 300 Senators and the Chamber of Deputies of 585 members.

More than that, we find that even in the German Reichstag the number of members is 396, while the population of the German Empire is only 52,000,000. We find that Mexico, our neighbor to the south, has a House of Representatives in which one member is apportioned to every 40,000 people, making a House of 314 members, nearly as large as this body. Canada has a senate of 80 members and a house of commons of 213 members. We find that little Switzerland has a much larger representative body than this, although her population is not more than one-fifteenth as great as ours. The popular legislative body of Italy is 508, of Austria is 425, and of Hungary is 453.

The objection is made that this Hall is not large enough to justify any increase in the number of Representatives. Mr. Speaker, is it possible that we are going to regulate or control the membership of the greatest legislative body on earth because the confines of its chamber are not quite as extended as they might be? Is it possible that we may mean to determine the membership of the House by the room in which we happen to meet? Are we going to fit the membership of Congress to a certain room? But even upon this proposition the chairman of the committee is wrong.

This additional number of 29 Representatives can be easily accommodated in this Chamber. If you take out the lounges and seats in the lobby in the rear of the curtained railing, you will have room for 75 more members if you wish to add that many. And it would be better for the House if that space were used in some way or other than it is at present. We know that the disorder in this House results from the noise occurring in the rear of the curtained railing in this very lobby, which ought to be abolished. The lounges and the seats ought to be taken out so that members can not sit down and converse with each other there. We could accommodate 75 additional members, if necessary, instead of 29, the number provided in the bill of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and still have convenient passageways.

Thus we find that the arrangements necessary to accommodate the proposed increased membership can be made very easily. I have before me a chart of the seats of the House of Representatives. I have attempted to add 30 seats, to see whether there would result any inconvenience in the seating capacity of the House. I find that by simply adding two portions of a section of 10 in the rear and extending the last row as it now exists a little farther, so as to accommodate 5 more members, we should have an additional seating capacity of 15 seats on each side without in any manner interfering with convenient access to or exit from this Chamber.

If we want to have good order in this House, we can never have it while we have places in the rear concealed from the Speaker by curtains for members to sit down and discuss with each other public questions. There is where the noise comes from. You and I have seen members of the House stop during their speeches and ask persons in the rear of these curtains to desist from loud talking. It will never cease until the lobby is abolished. It will be abolished if the seats for 30 new members are placed there, and hence we will have better order than we do now.

Mr. Speaker, I contend there is no argument in the position taken that the size of this Chamber should limit the membership of this House; that the number of members of a great legislative body like the Congress of the United States should be determined by whether the Hall is suitable to accommodate a proposed number or not. But in this case the Hall is suitable—just as suitable for the number of members proposed in the Burleigh bill as the number proposed by the committee bill.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, the gentleman thinks that the proper membership of the House, not the capacity of the Hall, should be the paramount consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; it seems to me that the House, and not the Hall, should be paramount.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I yield five minutes' more time to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in his remarks has attempted to prove too much in his declaration that on the ratio of inhabitants to Representatives for Maine given by the Burleigh bill Iowa loses 2; that Indiana loses 1; that New York loses 2; that Pennsylvania loses 2; that California loses 1; that South Carolina loses 1; that Missouri loses 1, and that Kentucky loses 1; in all, 21 members. That would require a House of 407 members. The Hopkins bill is subject to the same objection. Colorado has a population of 539,103, and yet is allowed only 2 members. It takes 269,551 inhabitants in Colorado to be entitled to a member, while in New York or Illinois it takes only about 208,000. If Illinois were allowed members on the same terms as Colorado, she would lose 4 members, instead of gaining 1; New York would lose 5 members, instead of gaining 1, and nearly all the States would lose. So it appears that the same logic of the gentleman from Illinois applied to his own bill causes much more injustice than the Burleigh bill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Burleigh bill is predicated upon a proper system, but it is a much better bill than the one proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. The number which I think is the fairest number, the one that is in accordance with the second set of apportionment tables sent by the Director of the Census, would be 387. That number would cause not a single loss to any State and would be predicated upon an apportionment of 194,000 inhabitants to each Representative.

Mr. Speaker, it may be that under the number 387 of this second system there will be gains to some States of 2 and 3, Illinois gaining 3, New York gaining 3, Texas gaining 3; but no one can contend that that apportionment would be anything except absolutely fair to all the States of the Union. In that apportionment the membership is determined by a basis of 194,000 inhabitants, by which the total population of each State is divided, and then allowing an additional Representative for each major fraction remaining. It seems to me that that number under the second system would be well for this House to adopt.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has said that this system which I am talking about now has inequalities. I tried to get the opportunity to ask him wherein the inequalities existed, wherein there was any injustice done to any State, but he would not yield. He said that in the debates in the Senate and House in 1840 the injustice of the old system was denounced, but the debates in Congress were not upon the question of major fractions; were not upon the question of the apportionment which has been specified in this second set of tables sent by the Director of the Census. It was predicated upon the theory that nothing was allowed for any fraction whatever, whether it was a major fraction or not.

You can readily see that if 200,000 were the basis of apportionment agreed upon, and a State had a fraction of 199,000 unrepresented, that could be the basis of a strong argument against such injustice, and you can readily see that there might be an outpouring of wrath against a system that would admit of such an outrage. The allowing of representation upon major fractions did away with the injustice of the system. But the system that is proposed here by the Director of the Census, which allows a Representative for each major fraction, makes it as perfect a system as can be devised.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the bill which is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is a bill that has too many inequalities and works too much injustice to admit of its adoption by this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURLEIGH. I yield to my colleague [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the hour is so late that I could make but very little progress in my speech this evening, and for that reason I move that the House do now adjourn. I reserve my place, of course, for opening in the morning.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the vote on the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ZIEGLER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWN, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BARTLETT, until Monday, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WILSON of Idaho, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Mary Hughes, administratrix of Clarissa Young, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for expense of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting schedules of useless papers in the files of the Department—to the Joint Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of civilian engineers employed in river and harbor work—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting the annual report of the commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported the bill of the House (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2136); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12577) granting a pension to Sarah B. Schaeffer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2137); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1148) to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2138); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 633) granting an increase of pension to Vianna Mallard, widow of John Q. Mallard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2139); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12258) for the relief of John H. Doremus, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2140); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12616) granting an increase of pension to Nancy T. Hardy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2141); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Robert P. Currin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2142); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12415) granting an increase of pension to Carrie Otis Wallace, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2143); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. VREELAND, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5613) to increase the pension of Louis Nessell, a survivor of the Mexican war, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2144); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3232) granting an increase of pension to David Flinn, reported the same with amendment accompanied by a report (No. 2145); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEYMOUTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11658) to place on the pension roll the name of Mary I. Nelson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2146); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12294) granting a pension to Lottie M. V. Rankins, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2147); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12233) granting a pension to Ashel C. Aulick, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2148); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10118) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Flynn, of Mississippi, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2149); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5599) granting an honorable discharge to James L. Proctor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2158); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 134) relating to leaves of absence granted officers of the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5014) to authorize the Fourth Pool Connecting Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, reported it with amendments.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. SEWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States, to report them back adversely.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the amendments be read.

The Secretary read the amendments, as follows:

Strike out all provisions in this bill which place an age limit against the appointment of meritorious volunteers to positions in the staff and line of the Regular Army, and add the following at end of bill:

"It is further provided, That one-third of the original vacancies created by this act, in all grades, from colonel down to second lieutenant, in both staff and line, shall be filled by selection from the officers of volunteers who have been commissioned in their respective staff corps or arm of service since April 21, 1898. The remaining two-thirds of original vacancies created by this act to be filled by selection from the officers of the Regular Army."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the amendments may lie upon the table, so that I can call them up and offer them to the bill at the proper time.

Mr. SEWELL. There is no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments will lie on the table, with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 5392) granting a pension to Ellen Hicks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5393) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Burch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KENNEY introduced a bill (S. 5396) granting a pension to Ephraim Jefferson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5397) granting a pension to Charity McKenney;

A bill (S. 5398) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Pilsbury; and

A bill (S. 5399) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Smith.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 5400) granting a pension to Martin Dismukes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 5401) granting a pension to Scottie E. McClure; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5402) granting a pension to Sarah McCord; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Sarah McCord, widow of Marcus D. L. McCord, of Capt. Scott Terry's Company, Tennessee Militia, Indian wars, together with the affidavits of A. J. Ponder, Thomas Mabrey, and David B. Young, and letters from the Pension Office and War Department. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5403) for relief of George C. Ellison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 5404) to extend the privileges provided by an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, as amended; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a bill (S. 5405) granting an increase of pension to John H. Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 5406) to amend section 3296, Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5407) to amend section 19 of chapter 252, 29 Statutes at Large, approved May 28, 1896; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

After section 41 insert the following:

"SEC. 42. That the distinctive badges adopted by military societies of men who served in the armies and navies of the United States during the Spanish-American war and the incident insurrection in the Philippines may be worn upon all occasions of ceremony by officers and men of the Army and Navy of the United States who are members of said organizations in their own right."

REPORT OF ABRAHAM L. LAWSHE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 4th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby expresses its condemnation of the refusal of the Secretary of War, under whatever influence, to send to the Senate copies of papers called for by its resolution of the 19th of December, 1900, requesting the Secretary of War to send to the Senate the report of Abraham L. Lawshe in relation to the receipts and expenditures in Cuba, as in violation of his official duty and subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government and of a good administration thereof.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the resolution go over until Monday next, without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the resolution may retain its place until Monday morning. Is there objection? The Chairs hears none, and it is so ordered.

PAYMENTS TO SISSETON AND WAHPETON INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of all recommendations, requests, and papers on file in relation to the payment of money belonging to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians to said Indians since November 6, 1900, and to inform the Senate whether he informed said Indians, or any of them, or any other person, previous to November 6 that he would make said payment after that date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the portion of the resolution which calls for copies of papers and documents, but I doubt the propriety of calling upon a Cabinet officer to state whether he did or did not tell somebody that he would make payment after a certain date.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suppose that would be a matter of public record only.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not treated as a matter of public record. It is not a call for correspondence.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection. All I aimed at was to get the public record.

Mr. SPOONER. Let that part be stricken out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have the resolution so worded that whatever may be there in that connection, of record, shall come.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the correspondence on record in the office on the subject, but to ask a Cabinet officer whether he told a man to do this or to do that at a certain date is certainly not the proper thing.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It certainly would not do any harm.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a good precedent. If the Senate wants to investigate the Cabinet officer it can bring him before a committee and put questions to him and let him make his explanation; but to put a specific question to a Cabinet officer in that way, as if you were taking his deposition, is hardly the thing, I think.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will ask leave to amend the resolution so as to have him state whether he informed any correspondent in writing.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the first part of the resolution covers that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think so. I simply want the record.

Mr. SPOONER. I am willing that any correspondence on record in the office on the subject shall be brought here in answer to the resolution. I know nothing about the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; "papers on file."

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out all after the words "nineteen hundred."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course that would destroy the resolution. Therefore I ask that it may go over until next Monday.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator wants to add "together with all correspondence on the subject," I have no objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I want to cover the whole ground. I think we can amend it so as to agree.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest this form. It seems to me that the tone of the latter part of the resolution is the tone of a question put to a culprit. I do not suppose it was so intended, and probably it did not strike the Senator so, but I think it would strike many people so. It is not consistent with the decorum and courtesy which belong to our intercourse with the Departments. I suggest that the Senator substitute something like this: "and also will inform the Senate of any official assurances given upon the subject."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think if the resolution goes over until Monday we can probably agree upon wording that will not grate upon the ears of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the resolution lie over until Monday, retaining its place on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF MINING LAWS TO SALINE LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3313) extending the mining laws to saline lands. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. STEWART. I am instructed by the Committee on Mines and Mining to withdraw that amendment and offer a substitute for it. The amendment I send to the desk was reported in the House by the House committee and recommended by the Department. The Committee on Mines and Mining have considered it and adopted the House amendment and the Department's recommendation. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert, in lieu of the amendment of the committee, the following:

That all public lands of the United States containing salt springs, or deposits of salt in any form, and chiefly valuable therefor, are hereby declared to be subject to location and purchase under the provisions of the law relating to placer-mining claims: Provided, That the same person shall not locate or enter more than one claim hereunder: And provided further, That as to any of the public lands containing salt springs, or deposits of salt in any form, and chiefly valuable therefor, which have been heretofore occupied or attempted to be located, and are now claimed or improved as salt lands under such occupancy or attempted location, the claimants thereof shall have a preference right of location in conformity with this act for the period of six months from the passage thereof.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What does the term "public lands" include?

Mr. STEWART. Lands that belong to the United States and are not reservations, of course.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does not include reservations?

Mr. STEWART. It does not touch reservations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed substitute.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question.

Mr. STEWART. I will make a brief explanation of the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

At the time the original mining laws were passed it was not known that there were large salt deposits in the various Western States, while those deposits were very extensive. It was suggested that the reservation that has pertained up to that time of salt springs should be continued. That was suggested by people in the East. There were only a few of them, and the Government reserved them and proposed to lease them. I do not know whether any were leased or not. They have been reserved on the public land. They could be counted on your fingers. I suppose there were not more than half a dozen. But at that time they did not use salt in mining; it was merely free mining.

Subsequently all through the mining region it has been found necessary to use salt in reduction, and they have taken it from all over that country. There is an abundance of it. It is almost without limit. It is not as extensive as the alkali beds, but there is an abundance of it in every one of the mining States. There is no law by which they can get title to it. They are manufacturing it for export. Now, the men going into the enterprise want title, and there is no reason why they should not have it. This matter has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the amendment that we offer is recommended by him. It has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and there is no exception to it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose where we have admitted States we have reserved the title of the salt lands to the United States.

Mr. STEWART. We reserved those lands. It originated in the first place from the fact that there were very few salt deposits, and we did not want a monopoly of them to be created.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And we have not any law by which the title can be acquired?

Mr. STEWART. There is no law by which the title can be acquired. There are now vast fields of it in all the Western States, and they have been using it all the while.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And I suppose people have gone on without any right under the law——

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And have commenced to develop the salt mines, and this is to enable them to get title?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from Connecticut that in some of the Western regions they quarry salt as they quarry stone, and it is just about as valuable as stone when it is not close to a market.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was not objecting to the bill. I wanted to understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. On the shores of the Great Salt Lake in Utah there are deposits of salt. The waters of that lake have been receding steadily for many years past. I should like to ask the Senator if he considered that condition in connection with the framing of the phraseology of the bill giving preference to persons who locate now under mining claims over those who have heretofore located homesteads, a portion of which may be embraced within the salt lands formerly reserved.

Mr. STEWART. If they have located and acquired title, it is then withdrawn. The bill applies only to public lands. If there is any title to it, of course it would not apply.

Mr. CARTER. I understand, but the homestead filing might be rendered invalid by a declaration to the effect that the salt lands constituted, for instance, a part of the shore of Salt Lake. I do not think that any act ought to be passed which would impair the right of homestead settlers.

Mr. STEWART. I will meet that by saying "unoccupied public lands."

Mr. CARTER. That, I think, will cover it.

Mr. TELLER. That will cover it.

Mr. STEWART. That meets it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. As agreed to be amended I will not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification proposed by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert in the amendment, before the word "public," the word "unoccupied," so as to read "that all unoccupied public lands."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. PETTUS. The first part of the amendment is inconsistent with the proviso giving preference. I move to strike out the clause giving preference.

Mr. STEWART. That was recommended by the Department; but it is quite immaterial. Let it be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the last proviso, in the following words:

And provided further, That as to any of the public lands containing salt springs, or deposits of salt in any form, and chiefly valuable therefor, which have been heretofore occupied or attempted to be located, and are now claimed or improved as salt lands under such occupancy or attempted location, the claimants thereof shall have a preference right of location in conformity with this act for the period of six months from the passage thereof.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the proviso ought to be stricken out, because they are mining all around, and they would not want to have somebody come in and take their mines away from them.

Mr. PETTUS. The first part of the amendment provides for public unoccupied lands. Now, if they are public and unoccupied, how can anyone have a preference claim?

Mr. STEWART. This makes an exception in that particular case. It is, however, all unoccupied public land except in a case where they are occupying it for a salt mine. That would be simply an exception to the general proposition. That is all it would amount to.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not think any such preference ought to be given at all, for the reason that if a man is on that land, using it, occupying it, cultivating it as a salt mine, he is violating the laws of the United States, and he ought not to have a preference given him by reason of his violation of the law.

Mr. STEWART. I believe my friend was in California in the early days and was one of the violators of the law there.

Mr. PETTUS. Never in the world.

Mr. STEWART. We violated the law, and the Supreme Court held that we had a right to violate the law. If you will look at 3 Wallace, you will see that the court said they would shut their eyes to the fact that we had violated it and we might continue to violate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves to strike out the proviso which has just been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question having been put, there were on a division—yeas 11, nays 28; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Chair state the question once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, and a rising vote indicates no quorum to be present.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Can not that difficulty be obviated by calling for the yeas and nays at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think a call for yeas and nays can be made when the fact has been developed that no quorum is present.

Mr. TELLER and others. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dillingham,	McCumber,	Sewell,
Allison,	Dolliver,	McEnery,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	McLaurin,	Simon,
Bard,	Foster,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Bate,	Frye,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Beveridge,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Teller,
Burrows,	Harris,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Butler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Towne,
Chilton,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Turner,
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Vest,
Clay,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wellington.
Cockrell,	Kenney,	Proctor,
Culberson,	Lindsay,	Quarles,
Deboe,	Lodge,	Scott,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have responded to their names on the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to the amendment of the committtee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I feel obliged to move to proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

Mr. STEWART. Wait one moment, until we get a vote. It is all through.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had only a minute to wait in the beginning, and it has taken twenty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. Let us hear the amendment read.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment will again be read.

The Secretary again read the proviso proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. STEWART. I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama is accepted by the Senator from Nevada. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to be considered is on page 33 of the bill, to strike out section 27 and insert——

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer from the committee an amendment to be inserted at the end of section 22 on page 33.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, at the end of the new section 22, insert:

SEC. —. That when vacancies shall occur in the position of chief of any staff, corps, or department, the President may appoint to such vacancies, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, officers of the Army at large not below the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and who shall hold office for terms of four years. When a vacancy in the position of chief of any staff, corps, or department is filled by the appointment of an officer below the rank now provided by law for said office, said chief shall, while so serving, have the same rank, pay, and allowances now provided for the chief of such corps or department. And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff, corps, or department and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief: Provided, That so long as there remain in service officers of any staff, corps, or department holding permanent appointments, the chief of such staff, corps, or department shall be selected from the officers so remaining therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator who offers the amendment from the committee would explain what it means. Nobody can tell when read in that way. I know there is something about officers being appointed for four years. I do not know what it means. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont explain it.

Mr. PROCTOR. The last clause of our original bill of last session, which has been stricken out by the House, beginning at line 25, at the bottom of page 2, and continuing to the middle of page 3, had a provision that is practically the same as this, except that in the amendment just submitted we require that the head of the corps shall be confirmed by the Senate. That makes the provision comply precisely with the present arrangement in the Navy, which has worked so satisfactorily. It is limited by the proviso, so that all the officers now holding permanent appointments receive their regular promotion, and the selection of the chief must be made from them so long as any of them remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama submits a proposed amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus, or otherwise, for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by the Constitution or by act of Congress; and any person willfully violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be ordered to be printed and lie upon the table. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33 the committee propose to strike out section 27, as follows:

SEC. 27. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled by promotion or appointment under the provisions of preceding sections of this act, in offices of the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments; of captain in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay departments, and of first lieutenant in the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall not be filled by a permanent appointment, but shall be filled by the detail, by the Secretary of War, after competitive examination, as hereinafter provided, of an officer of the line, who shall serve for the period of four years unless sooner relieved, and shall not again be eligible for detail in any staff corps or department until he shall have rendered actual service for two years with troops of the arm in which he is commissioned. Any officer detailed for staff duty under the provisions of this section shall be selected from the grade corresponding to, or from the grade next below, that to which the detail is to be made, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade to which detailed. No detail for staff duty as herein provided shall be made in the case of any officer until he has actually served with troops for at least four years if his rank is above that of a second lieutenant, and for at least two years if he is a second lieutenant; and no such detail shall be made in the case of any officer until he shall have passed a satisfactory competitive examination by an examining board composed of three officers, of whom one may be a line officer and two shall be permanent or detailed officers of the department or corps in which the detail is to be made, said examination to be conducted under regulations to be prescribed by the President, and to be announced in general orders to the Army. Examining boards, to be constituted as herein prescribed, for the various departments and corps in which details are to be made shall be convened by the Secretary of War at such times and places as the exigencies of the service may require, and said board shall examine and report upon, as far as practicable, all line officers who may be applicants for details to staff duty, and who shall have been recommended by their commanding officers for such details. A separate list of officers reported on favorably by such examining boards shall be kept for each department or corps in which details are to be made, the officers on said list to be arranged in accordance with the ratings given them by the examining boards, and to be detailed for duty, in the department or corps to which the list pertains, in the order of their standing upon said list, beginning with the officers having the highest rating; but no officer shall remain eligible for detail for more than two years unless he shall again successfully pass the examination hereinbefore prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, beginning in line 10, to strike out section 28, as follows:

SEC. 28. That whenever there shall occur a vacancy, which can not be filled under the provisions of preceding sections of this act by the promotion of officers holding permanent appointments, in offices of the grades of colonel in the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's Departments, of major in the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments, of major in the Pay Department after the number of paymasters of that grade shall have been reduced below twenty, and of captain in the Signal Corps, such vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of an officer to be selected from among those who have served by detail, under the provisions of this act, in the next lower grade in the department or corps in which the vacancy occurs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand that the sections which have been stricken out are all one amendment, or are they separate amendments? I think for the convenience of a conference, if there ever should be one, they ought to be regarded as separate amendments, and so numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are treated as separate amendments.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 35, line 23, to renumber section 29 so as to make it section 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 9, to renumber section 30 so as to make it section 24, and in line 16, after the word "Officers," to insert "not over 40 years of age;" so as to read:

SEC. 24. That vacancies in the grade of field officers and captain, created by this act, in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in each branch, respectively. Vacancies existing after the promotions have been made shall be provided for as follows: A sufficient number shall be reserved in the rank of second lieutenant for the next graduating class at the United States Military Academy. Officers not over 40 years of age now holding commissions in the Volunteer Army may be ordered before boards of officers for such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, before the words "second lieutenant," to strike out "first or;" and in line 23, before the words "second lieutenant," to strike out "first or;" so as to read:

Volunteer officers who establish their fitness before these examining boards may be appointed to the grade of second lieutenant in the Regular Army. Volunteer officers so appointed to the grade of second lieutenant shall be arranged according to rank, on a separate list.

Mr. NELSON. Those two amendments ought not to be adopted. Under the bill as it came from the House appointments in the line were open to volunteer officers both in the grades of first and second lieutenants. This amendment strikes out first lieutenants and limits the appointments of volunteer officers wholly to second lieutenants. I think that is a discrimination that ought not to be permitted. I think both the grades of first and second lieutenant ought to be open for the appointment of officers who have been in the Volunteer Army since the Spanish war. I trust the amendment of the committee will not be adopted.

Mr. PROCTOR. They are open, but perhaps not quite so fully as in the bill as it came from the House. If the Senator will read further he will see that—

Volunteer officers so appointed to the grade of second lieutenant shall be arranged according to rank, on a separate list. All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service—

And there will be many—shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants of the Regular Army, according to seniority, etc.

Mr. NELSON. But the point is that none of them can be appointed as first lieutenants in the first instance, and when they get in as second lieutenants they have to take their places in the line of promotion with the other second lieutenants. I think we ought to leave both the grades of first and second lieutenant open—and it is surely little enough—to those volunteer officers. Take a man who has served with efficiency in the Volunteer Army as a major, a lieutenant-colonel, or a colonel, and there is no reason why he should be limited to a mere second lieutenancy. I should be glad if they had been permitted to go as high as captain; but I think the provision in the bill as it came from the House as to first lieutenants ought to stand, and I trust no change will be made in that respect.

Mr. TILLMAN. I asked the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] the other day to give me some information in regard to the provision in the bill, if there be one, permitting privates to be examined for promotion; whether there is any opportunity offered to young men who served in the Spanish war as officers and who have joined the Army as privates with a view of getting an opportunity to get into a lieutenant's position, to do so by competitive examination—men of high character and good standing—whether you have barred them and shut them out from any of these appointments or not. If not, would not the committee accept an amendment that would permit these privates to now get a chance to secure appointments as second lieutenants by the appointment of the President if they can stand the examination?

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that that is the law now, and it remains the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no provision in this bill for the increase of the Army looking to these appointments for that purpose.

Mr. SEWELL. This will not interfere with the general law that exists to-day. We are examining to-day, in almost every department and at almost every post, deserving privates and noncommissioned officers for commissions in the Army, and they get the promotion if they pass the examination.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then why have a special provision in this bill looking to the filling of these vacancies by officers only and not by officers and men who served in the Spanish war? You by specific action here bar the privates out, and yet you say there is a general act which permits them to be examined.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not think it bars them out at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then are you willing to put in "officers and privates?"

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is mistaken. It is true that privates can be examined and get commissions in the Army, but it is only privates who are in the Regular Army. It does not apply to the privates who have been in the volunteer service and are mustered out. They can not get the benefit of that law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will not the committee accept an amendment providing in this section for officers and enlisted men, so that any competitive examination will be open to any soldier who has enlisted or who is now in the Army?

Mr. BATE. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that there has been an amendment offered to this bill—I offered it yesterday—which includes privates as well as officers.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has that been accepted or voted on?

Mr. BATE. No; it has not. It is upon the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senate will have an opportunity to pass on it hereafter, and I have nothing more to say; but I do not want this to go by without those men having an opportunity of getting the position of second lieutenant if the bill itself prohibits the appointment of anybody except officers.

Mr. TELLER. I think this is a good place to amend this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think so, too—right here.

Mr. TELLER. It is very easy to do it if that is the sentiment of the Senate. In line 16, on page 36, after the word "officers," I move to insert "and enlisted men."

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that we ought to leave open at least the first and second lieutenancies, for we know that we got into the Army from the volunteer forces in this way some very excellent men, who are now in the public service or who have been retired. I think it has been one of the defects of the Regular Army that it has not held out sufficient inducements to privates and noncommissioned officers for promotion. I should like to have it broad enough to take in every man in the Army whom the President of the United States may think deserving of promotion.

Mr. HALE. Will the phrase "enlisted men" include what the Senator desires?

Mr. TILLMAN. "Or noncommissioned officers?"

Mr. HALE. "Or noncommissioned officers."

Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. HALE. It certainly ought to.

Mr. TELLER. The term "Officers," I suppose, includes noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. TELLER. Then, we want it to read "Officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men."

Mr. MONEY. Noncommissioned officers are enlisted men.

Mr. SPOONER. But all enlisted men are not noncommissioned officers.

Mr. MONEY. Of course not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the confusion which is prevailing the Chair does not know which Senator has the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I want to amend in this way—"Officers, noncommissioned officers"——

Mr. SEWELL. It is not necessary to put in "noncommissioned officers." The words "or enlisted men" will be sufficient.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, "enlisted men." There seems to be a difference of opinion. Let us put those words in to make the matter sure. When the bill goes into conference the committee can fix it so that it will be right. What we want is to open the door of promotion to noncommissioned officers and privates. There is no way now, as I understand, in which that can be done.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I do not know much about it.

Mr. NELSON. The term "enlisted men" covers technically both privates and noncommissioned officers, and is a better term than the other, and more comprehensive.

Mr. TELLER. If it does, that is enough. Some Senators, however, seem to think it does not. I should have thought it did, but the chairman of the committee can tell us.

Mr. HAWLEY. Unquestionably the phrase "enlisted men" does include noncommissioned officers.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Then, I will move the amendment in the way I first suggested it—"Officers and enlisted men." Then, I want the Senate to disagree to the amendment proposed by the committee, and leave the positions of first and second lieutenant open to these promotions if the President thinks fit to make them.

Mr. MONEY. I inquire of the Chair if the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is to be voted upon now, or is the amendment suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] or by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the matter to be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was a unanimous-consent agreement that the committee amendments should be first acted upon, and another unanimous consent was given that that should not prevent the offering of any amendment hereafter.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that; but what I want to know is what is under consideration. What is to be voted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MONEY. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. Is that the pending question?

Mr. NELSON. I was not offering an amendment. I merely spoke against the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. MONEY. Oh!

Mr. NELSON. The committee amendment was under consideration, and that is an amendment to eliminate the position of first lieutenant from appointments that are open to volunteer officers—limiting promotions to second lieutenancies. That is the effect of the amendment of the committee. I was opposing it and wanting the bill to remain as it came from the other House, leaving the positions of first and second lieutenants open to volunteer officers.

Mr. MONEY. If that is the matter to be voted upon, I want to say that I entirely agree with the Senator from Minnesota. I think both the first and second lieutenancies should be left open to meritorious officers or privates if they show their competency before a board of examination. We have some soldiers in the Philippines to-day who distinguished themselves in the Cuban campaign during the Spanish war, and who have since distinguished themselves in the Philippines. If these young gentlemen wish to adopt the profession of arms, after having proved their thorough fitness and capacity and courage for that service, they ought to have left open to them a bigger place than that of second lieutenant.

I have in mind a young gentleman who served with distinction on the staffs of General Ewers and General Wood, and he has very high testimonials from those generals. He has since served with distinction in the Philippines. He has been made adjutant of his regiment. He has served as judge-advocate to general courts-martial. He has been four times mentioned in reports for distinguished and conspicuous bravery in action, and he is now recommended by the General Commanding the Army for two brevets, one as a major and one as lieutenant-colonel, for gallantry in action and general meritorious conduct. That young gentleman wants to quit the study and the practice of the law and be a soldier, but he can not very well afford to do so if he is to be but a second lieutenant, because he has a family. That is one case I know all about, and there are numbers of others that I know something about.

I do not believe, if any young man has served his country, has risked his life in war, and has shown his thorough capacity and courage and talent and everything else to make an officer, that he should have open to him only the lowest grade of commission, that of second lieutenant. In fact, I believe the bill as it came from the House should be amended so as to leave the grade of captain open to such meritorious cases. Of course, the discretion of the President must come in here. No man can be appointed to any position unless he has the recommendation of his superior officer, of his colonel, of his brigadier, his major-general, or his corps general, or whoever commands, and all these recommendations must concur in pointing out to the President the distinguished ability and merits of the soldier who is trying for a commission in the Regular Army. So that in any event the matter is thoroughly safeguarded.

I believe the grade of captain should be open to these gallant fellows, and I am in favor of leaving it open to them. It would be no disparagement to the regulars that they would be compelled to compete with these men who are their equals in every respect. I hope that the committee amendment to the House bill will not pass. I would rather see the grade extended up to that of the rank of captain, so that these gentlemen might have at least a chance for this promotion.

We understand how people are appointed to Westpoint. I had a competitive examination for the selection of a cadet, but other gentlemen appoint because they know the boy, some appoint by special examination or selection; and all sorts of people get in there. All the hazing business which is brought to light does not do credit to the institution as it is now conducted. We certainly will get as good material for officers, and certainly for generals, out of the volunteer force, as we can get from the cadets at Westpoint, who are to-day disgracing the whole country, or at least some of them are doing so, if the report of the examining committee can be at all trusted.

I shall insist when the time comes to vote that there shall be some provision made for these men.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make no objection whatever to crossing out the black brackets there, and leaving the words "first or" in the bill where they occur in two places, so as to make the provision apply to the positions of first and second lieutenant.

Mr. TELLER. Let that be voted on, and then I want to state my amendment, with which I have not yet got through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendments in lines 21 and 23, of section 24, on page 36, which have been read.

The amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the next amendment of the committee will be stated. Later on, under another unanimous-consent agreement, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be clearly in order.

Mr. TELLER. But there is nothing to prevent me from offering my amendment now, which I propose to do. I have not had a chance to complete it yet. I have got part of it offered, but through the intervention of others I did not get through. I should like to complete the amendment. My motion is to insert, after the word "officers," in line 16 of the pending section, the words "and enlisted men." Now, to make that conform with the other part of the section we can strike out the words "now holding commissions." That is my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Colorado to line 16 of the bill, which reads:

Officers not over 40 years of age now holding commissions in the Volunteer Army may be ordered before boards of officers for such examination.

That is connected with the provision which the Senator now proposes to amend. If the Senator will examine the two propositions, he will see there will have to be an amendment there in order to make the intention clear.

Mr. HAWLEY. Some amendment must follow if we preserve the words "first or" in the two places there; and my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is prepared to present the proper amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I withhold my amendment until I see what the committee propose.

Mr. SEWELL. In line 24, after the word "list," I move to strike out:

All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants of the Regular Army, according to seniority as determined by length of prior commissioned service—

Leaving in the words:

But nothing herein contained shall change the relative rank of officers heretofore commissioned as second lieutenants in the Regular Army.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator proposes to strike out from line 24 down to and including line 5 on page 37?

Mr. SEWELL. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey, in behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 24, after the word "list," it is proposed to strike out:

All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants of the Regular Army, according to seniority as determined by length of prior commissioned service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to have that read again, as I did not catch the effect of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. SEWELL.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that we have thrown open to the volunteers promotion to the positions of first and second lieutenant. Then the bill goes on to say that—

Volunteer officers so appointed to the grade of first or second lieutenant shall be arranged, according to rank, on a separate list.

That covers the whole thing.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question as to this bill, while he is on the floor.

Authority is given in the bill for the appointment of commissioned officers in the volunteers to a rank in the Regular Army as high as that of first lieutenant. Is it intended by the bill to prohibit the President from making any appointments whatsoever in the Regular Army from civil life?

Mr. SEWELL. He could not, under this bill, above the grade of first lieutenant, except in the staff corps.

Mr. DANIEL. He could make no appointment whatever from civil life in the Regular Army if this bill should become a law?

Mr. SEWELL. Except under the present law; and that is done all the time.

Mr. DANIEL. But does not this supersede the present law?

Mr. SEWELL. I should think not.

Mr. DANIEL. Then why is it necessary to give the President authority in the bill to appoint men now in the Army to the rank of second lieutenant if he can do it anyway?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that if his amendment is adopted I think the President could appoint. This strikes out the restriction upon the appointing power. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is to strike out the very clause which imposes this restriction.

Mr. DANIEL. No; it allows appointments "from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants of the Regular Army."

Mr. ALDRICH. It confines the appointments to those.

Mr. DANIEL. To those two lists.

Mr. ALDRICH. But if that language is stricken out, the appointing power is not restrained by any language in the law, as I understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. If it be true that this opens the entire list of the first lieutenants to appointments from civil life, I think it might create great confusion.

Mr. DANIEL. That was not my proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the intent and purpose of the bill and of the House amendment is to confine at least the appointments of first and second lieutenants to persons who have served in the war with Spain.

Mr. DANIEL. As the bill now stands there is authority given to appoint second lieutenants from "officers not over 40 years of age now holding commissions in the Volunteer Army." If the President already has the power to appoint any person a second lieutenant in the Regular Army from civil life, what is the necessity of putting in here authority to him to appoint one who is now serving in the volunteers?

Mr. SEWELL. It is to cover the volunteer officers in the war with Spain. The rule of the Army, established by regulations, is to give vacancies as they occur, first to the graduates from Westpoint——

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that.

Mr. SEWELL. And to the deserving noncommissioned officers and privates who have passed an examination—we are constantly examining them; we do not get enough of them—and then to civilian appointments, and civilians were appointed largely last year and the year before in order to fill up the Army. Some of them were among the brightest young men in the country, graduates of our colleges.

Mr. DANIEL. That is what I want to preserve.

Mr. SEWELL. That is preserved, and the general law is not interfered with by this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I was afraid this bill might be construed to override that. The bill, in my judgment, is too restrictive anyway. I do not sympathize at all with the spirit or structure of the bill. It looks like a skillful piece of military engineering by a Regular Army officer to keep out of the Army many of the brightest and best military spirits in this country.

According to the newspapers, there is now lying before the Senate the nomination of a volunteer officer in the Philippines to the rank of general, and while the President is recognizing, what every intelligent man in the country knows to be the fact, that we have many volunteer officers in all the States of this Union who are capable of commanding battalions, regiments, brigades, divisions, and armies, the Senate is engaged, after having just welcomed home many of our men from a successful war, in proscribing them from holding any commissions in the permanent service of the country save that of second lieutenant. This is the most proscriptive bill against the volunteers of this country that has ever been proposed in either House of Congress. The whole spirit and texture of it is wrong.

Mr. President, every war that this country has ever been engaged in has been fought for the most part by volunteers—nearly all of them——

Mr. TILLMAN. Without any question.

Mr. DANIEL. The Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the civil war, and in the last war the volunteers were not in any respect inferior to the regulars. No man can point to any field in the late war or to any field in the military history of this country on which the volunteers have not maintained the American character and the American name in a manner worthy of this country. The regulars are skillful officers and good men, but for the Senate to go to work and give them a monopoly in the military service of the country is opposed to our history, opposed to precedent, and absolutely opposed to the military and equitable justice of this case.

I do not see why a volunteer officer who is fit for it, who has been in the service, and who has learned something of the art of war in the best school in which that art is ever taught—practical experience—shall not hold, if the President thinks he is fit to hold it, any commission in a regiment, or any other commission in the Army. We do not wish to segregate and isolate the military establishment of this country from all sympathy with and from all reenforcement from the ranks of the people. We ought to keep an open door between the Regular Army and the people, and have the people going into it all the time, carrying their views and their knowledge, which are something more than any young man acquires at Westpoint. We want the trained, technical, expert military element in the Army to give it certain shape and drill and certain elements of military science which can not be learned offhand; but the other element we want in the Army is a much greater one than that. It is the martial and adaptive spirit of a free people. We want to intermix men who have come fresh from the people with men who have been a long time segregated from the people, and it is in that amalgamated sentiment that we will find the best type of American thought and of the American officer.

I shall vote to strike out these prohibitions upon the American people from the right to go into the military service. I wish that this was a volunteer bill instead of a bill to provide for so massive a Regular Army. The volunteers have never failed to come forward whenever the country has said "I need you." They are in the Philippines to-day, and every official in the Government, from the President down, has applauded their good work; and as they will be coming home they will find another army going there, in which they are proscribed from holding any commission but that of second lieutenant—a beautiful welcome for the Senate of this country to hand to the returning volunteers—a law proscribing them and all their officers from holding any commission in the army which is sent to complete that work, except the lowest commission in it—and at a time when the President of the country recognizes that they have amongst them men who ought to be and are being promoted to the rank of general.

This is an exclusive bill, Mr. President, devised for the purpose of being exclusive, and to give the officers of the Regular Army a priority and advantage to which they are not entitled. I am glad to see a regular officer promoted, and there are some who ought to be promoted and who have been neglected, but I am not in favor of turning over all the military affairs of the country to the regulation and to the command of regular officers. The Commander in Chief of the Army to-day is not a Westpointer or an educated military man, excepting such education as he obtained in the field. The Adjutant-General of the Army, whom the Senate has recently seen fit to promote from brigadier-general to major-general in consideration of his excellent service in the late war, was also an American volunteer who never rubbed his head against the walls of Westpoint.

Mr. BERRY. He never was hazed?

Mr. DANIEL. There are here eminent men on both sides of the Chamber who were major-generals and brigadier-generals and who are honored by their countrymen, not one of whom ever got his start in war from Westpoint. And this is the body which is asked to go back upon American history and upon the record of its own most distinguished military men, upon the present conduct of the Senate and the present organization of the Army, and to say that the brightest and best and bravest and most heroic men in this country, who have just returned from fields red with their blood, shall hold no commission in its service but that of second lieutenant; and now we are trying to squeeze it up to a first lieutenancy. I would throw the whole Army open to them, Mr. President. The President, in the exercise of his discretion, will give such preference to the regular officers as the nature of the case will warrant.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him a question for information? I am not much of a military man, and I should like to understand him. I understand him to state that nothing but the grade of second lieutenant is open for appointment by the President.

Mr. ALLISON. First lieutenant now.

Mr. DANIEL. If we make it so.

Mr. SEWELL. We have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALDRICH in the chair). That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. VEST. My understanding, derived from my experience as a Senator, is that Presidents have been in the habit of appointing second lieutenants and brigadier-generals from civil life, and that the appointments are confined to those two grades. I should like to know from some member of the Military Affairs Committee if I am not correct. I know that appointments of brigadier-generals from civil life have been sent to the Senate since I have been in service here. I think there is one pending here now.

Mr. SEWELL. There is no prohibition. The President can appoint anyone if the Senate will confirm him.

Mr. VEST. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey if the appointment of a brigadier-general from civil life, a citizen of Illinois, has not been sent to the Senate, and is now pending, I believe, before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SEWELL. Who?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey on behalf of the committee.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the following:

All vacancies then existing in the grade of first lieutenant in each arm of the service shall be filled from this list and the lineal lists of second lieutenants of the Regular Army, according to seniority, as determined by length of prior commissioned service.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, that clause certainly does confine the appointments by the President to the Regular Army. It seems to be the contention here now as to whether these appointments ought to come from the Regular Army exclusively or from the volunteers also. This very amendment seems to go to the gist of this contention. I should myself like to see some relief to this embarrassment. I believe in extending it to include volunteers. While I have the highest opinion of the regular officers of our Army and think, in some instances, they should have preference because of their experience and education, yet I do not like to see the bar put up and the door closed against those who have shown themselves worthy in the hour of peril, and have gone forth in battle for the country and have come out with honor.

Mr. President, I know such instances where it would work a marked injustice. There was a regiment from my own State which the President has on more than one occasion alluded to in complimentary terms in his public addresses—the First Tennessee Regiment. That regiment was enlisted immediately after the outbreak of hostilities with Spain, and was sent to the Philippine Islands, and, instead of being sent home at the expiration of its term of service, was kept for nineteen months, and no murmur heard from them, and when orders had been received to go home and they were upon the vessel that was to transport them notice was given that the enemy was approaching. They immediately got off the ship, went ashore to resist the enemy, and did not return until the situation was relieved. Col. Frank Cheatham was then a major commanding a battalion in that regiment; and instead of coming home, as they had a right to do, enough of them reenlisted and formed a battalion in the Thirty-seventh Regiment. Major Cheatham has, by legitimate gradations, become the colonel of the Thirty-seventh Regiment, and is with the battalion of Tennesseans still in the service. He and his command will be mustered out the 30th of June. This officer has been in the Army since the beginning of the Spanish war.

Arguments are sometimes better understood when you illustrate them by a person. Colonel Cheatham is a military man by nature, and experienced by his command at home of the State Guards. He is the son of the man whose honored name he bears, and who was a major-general of distinction in our civil war. Now, that man having reenlisted, and having assisted in reenlisting a battalion for his country's service, and while they were in Manila, costing the Government nothing to take them there, he and those with him have done well their part; yet, under the terms of this bill, he and his fellow-officers have to step down and out; and I suppose the most that could be done for him, under the amendment, is a first lieutenancy. That is the case now presented.

We want some remedy for it. This is a restrictive measure, as was said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], one that meets my disapproval, Mr. President, although I am on the Committee on Military Affairs, from which this amended bill came. I am opposed to this inequality and injustice, and I shall vote against this bill because it is restrictive and unjust and gives a monopoly to the regulars over volunteers. Indeed, it pushes aside volunteers altogether. I have a high opinion of our Regular Army, its officers and men. The regular officers, as a class, are educated, polished social gentlemen, attractive and winsome, and well calculated to impress Senators and committees with their way of thinking and make us feel kindly to their interests and sympathize with their ambition. But we can not forget the historic volunteer. This bill is restrictive; aye, is drastic. It is monopolizing in fact as well as in tendency. I object to it on that ground, as I do on many others that I hope to have occasion to present to the Senate hereafter in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I sympathize with many of the things said here, but we are not at present coming to any practical result. I suggest that this section lie over until Monday's session, and in the meantime we will have a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs and try to submit a proposition which will be acceptable.

Mr. BATE. That is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that course? If not, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to object, but I want to say to the committee that they will have to do more than report this bill as it came from the House. Unless they come here with an amendment which will give the enlisted man an opportunity to be promoted by the President as he ought to be, I shall move an amendment. If the committee will do that, of course it will save them some trouble. I have no objection to this. There must be other amendments to make it harmonious.

Mr. NELSON. What is the state of the last amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been passed over until Monday by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. It goes over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. Before this matter is passed over, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk. I ask that it may be printed, to be considered with this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, section 24, line 17, after the word "Army," insert the following:

And those volunteer officers not over 30 years of age who held commissions during the war with Spain and are now serving in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. BATE. I should like to hear it again. It is not a committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not a committee amendment. It is an amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming and is not now in order. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37 it is proposed to renumber section 31 so that it will stand as section 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 37 it is proposed to renumber section 32 so that it will stand as section 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of the amendment on page 37 striking out certain words?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is part of the section which has been passed over.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to offer an amendment to section 26, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 26 on page 37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 1, after the word "direct," it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That in the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law, and after the expiration of one year of service, should either of his parents die, leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may be honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War.

Mr. TELLER. I wish somebody would tell why that is to be stricken out. It seems to be a good provision.

Mr. SPOONER. It ought certainly to be stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. I should like somebody to give a good reason for it.

Mr. SPOONER. For this reason: It is restrictive.

Provided, That in the event of the enlistment of a soldier in the Army for the period required by law, and after the expiration of one year of service, should either of his parents die, leaving the other solely dependent upon the soldier for support, such soldier may be honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon due proof being made of such condition to the Secretary of War.

The implication from that language would be that only in such case should the discharge be made, and the soldier would be obliged to serve a year. I suppose if the wife of a soldier serving in the Philippines died, leaving a family of children to be taken care of, he could be discharged. The power of the President is what the power of the President ought to be, to discharge a man at any time when the circumstances presented to him are such as to warrant the exercise of that authority; and there is no sense whatever, to my mind, in this proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from Wisconsin has made a good case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to renumber section 33 so as to stand as section 27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, section 27, line 10, to strike out the word "rendezvous" and insert "stations;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of War is authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruiting stations, and while performing such duty 1 member of each party shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and 1 the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal of the arm of the service to which they respectively belong.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to renumber section 34 so as to stand as section 28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to renumber section 35 so as to stand as section 29.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to renumber section 36 so as to stand as section 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. In new section 30, page 39, line 11, the committee propose an amendment, to strike out the words "or resigned" and after "service" to insert the words "by resignation or otherwise;" so that it will read:

And have been honorably discharged from the service by resignation or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS. I desire to offer an amendment and have it printed. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia offers an amendment, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 17, line 5, page 29, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 6, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" in line 8, to strike out "nine" and insert "twenty;" in line 9, to strike out "seven" and insert "five;" so that lines 3 to 9 inclusive shall read:

That the Pay Department shall consist of 1 paymaster with the rank of brigadier-general, 4 paymasters with the rank of colonel, 5 paymasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 20 paymasters with the rank of major, and 25 paymasters with the rank of captain, mounted.

Also to strike out the word "nine," in line 15, and insert "twenty;" to strike out "nine," in line 23, and insert after the word "reduced" the words "below twenty;" so that line 23 shall read:

After the number of majors has been reduced below 20.

Mr. ELKINS. Make that line 15; line 23 is wrong.

Mr. BATE. What section is it?

Mr. ELKINS. Section 15. I also wish to strike out the word "forty," in line 19, and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. HALE. How much of an increase is it?

Mr. ELKINS. It does not increase it at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. This amendment is to be passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was read for information, and will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 39, to strike out all of section 37 and insert the following:

SEC. 31. That any officer of the Army now on the active list below the grade of brigadier-general who served during the civil war shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and pay of the next higher grade, except such officers as may be retired under section 29 of this act. This section shall apply to officers who have been retired on or since the 11th day of August, 1898, but shall not apply to any officer whose service on the active list does not exceed thirty-five years.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the committee to let that section be passed over. I have an amendment to that section. I want to discuss it a little.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me to perfect it a little further by committee amendments?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; but I do not want to have it adopted now.

Mr. PROCTOR. No; I move to insert, as a committee amendment, in line 5, after the word "war," the words "prior to April 9, 1865." The reason for that, as the Senator will see plainly, is that the war did not officially terminate until August. It is to limit it to those who were in the civil war before the actual fighting ceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, section 31, line 5, after the word "war," it is proposed to insert "prior to April 9, 1865."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Further, in line 10, after the word "whose," I move to insert "active."

Mr. TELLER. So as to read "active service."

Mr. PROCTOR. So as to read "active service;" and in the next line I move to strike out "on the active list" and insert "in the Army, exclusive of service as a cadet at the United States Military Academy;" so that it will read:

But shall not apply to any officer whose active service in the Army, exclusive of service as cadet at the United States Military Academy, does not exceed thirty-five years.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator that he had better amend that by striking out "five" and let it stand on the statute, which allows a man to be retired on thirty years' service. If he will do that I think the provision will be very fair.

There are a large number of men who have been retired after thirty years' service. Instead of being retired for disability, many of them who have been disabled have preferred, instead of going before a board when they had served thirty years in active service, to take the retirement. Now, here the committee have extended it to thirty-five years, which excludes all that class of men. If the Senator will strike out "five" I think it will cover my objection to it, but I want to look at it a little further.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand this section, it does not apply to any officer who has hitherto been retired. It applies only to officers to be retired hereafter.

Mr. HALE. In the future.

Mr. ALLISON. In the future.

Mr. TELLER. It says:

This section shall apply to officers who have been retired on or since the 11th day of August, 1898, but shall not apply to any officer whose service on the active list does not exceed thirty-five years.

I want to strike that out.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to make a suggestion to the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to discuss it now, because I have an amendment to cover it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to discuss it either. I wish to suggest to the committee, however, that if they insert this section it will be only a year or two until all officers who have been hitherto retired will ask to be put on the same list of retirement at a grade above the grade in which they served at the time of their retirement.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no question but that the Senator from Iowa is strictly correct in that statement. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that he allow the section to be perfected and then on Monday propose his entire amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to that course, but I want the Senator to go a little further. If he does not choose to do so, it may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, section 31, line 10, before the word "service" insert "active;" in line 11 strike out "on the active list" and insert "in the Army, exclusive of service as a cadet at the United States Military Academy;" so as to read:

But shall not apply to any officer whose active service in the Army, exclusive of service as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, does not exceed thirty-five years.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section as amended will now be passed over. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to renumber section 38 so as to stand as section 32.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, to renumber section 39 so as to stand as section 33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to renumber section 40 so as to stand as section 34.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 4, section 34, before the word "wine," to strike out "beer;" and in line 5, after the word "any," to strike out "intoxicating liquors" and insert "distilled spirits;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 34. The sale of or dealing in wine or any distilled spirits by any person in any post exchange or canteen or army transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States, is hereby prohibited. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to oppose this amendment; but the Senator from North Dakota is particularly interested in this question, and I know that he has an amendment which he proposes to submit to the committee amendment; so I trust that it may go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that this section may be passed over. In the absence of objection that course will be pursued.

Mr. SPOONER. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask may be printed, and which I intend to offer, to come in at the end of renumbered section 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin gives notice of his intention to offer an amendment, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 17, page 30, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That any volunteer officer who was appointed under the provisions of existing law an additional paymaster and who is now in the service as such shall be eligible to appointment as paymaster under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment and have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado gives notice of his purpose to offer an amendment, which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The following amendment is intended to be proposed by Mr. TELLER:

Amend section 29, page 38, by striking out the words "has been," in line 3, and inserting "shall be hereafter."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 43, to renumber section 41 so as to stand as section 35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the last amendment of the committee except those that have been passed over for consideration at a later date. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have an amendment here, a copy of which is pasted in the bill. I send it to the desk. It is proposed as section 36, and it is desired by the Subsistence Department and the Secretary of War. It is followed by another short section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to amend by adding at the end of this bill a new section, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 36. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe the kinds and quantities of the component article of the Army ration, and to direct the issue of substitutive equivalent articles in place of any such components whenever, in his opinion, economy and a due regard to the health and comfort of the troops may so require.

SEC. 37. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment of the committee which has been passed over will now be taken up.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to inquire what was done with section 34, the canteen question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was passed over. The first committee amendment passed over will now be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 27 the committee propose to strike out all of section 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. What is section 20?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee reported a substitute which ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 27 the committee propose to strike out all of section 20, and to insert:

SEC. 16. That the grade of veterinarian of the second class in cavalry regiments, United States Army, is hereby abolished, and hereafter the two veterinarians authorized for each cavalry regiment and the one veterinarian authorized for each artillery regiment shall receive the pay and allowances of second lieutenants, mounted. Such number of veterinarians as the Secretary of War may authorize shall be employed to attend animals pertaining to the Quartermaster's or other departments not directly connected with the cavalry and artillery regiments, at a compensation not exceeding $100 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] desire to proceed further with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to finish the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. It can not be done to-day.

Mr. TELLER. You can not do it to-day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

AGREEMENT WITH CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside informally and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I hope I may have the order to include the judicial salary bill. I understand there is not to be much objection to that measure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is very important to get this bill out of the way, it having been held a long time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the pending order of business be laid aside informally and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending order is the Army reorganization bill. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to interfere with the Senator. I suppose it is not expected to take up the Army bill again to-day.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have unanimous consent to have the judicial bill also considered, but with the assurance of the Senator from Connecticut that this is something which requires haste I will waive it. Otherwise I would ask unanimous consent that then the judicial bill be taken up, if any time of the day be left for the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are two of those bills I will state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent, when that is over, if any time be left to-day, that the judicial salary bill be taken up.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are two of these agreements, one with the Creek Nation and the other with the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Matters have been delayed and thrown into confusion because the bills have not been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of the bill which is now to be taken up and another of similar character which is to follow the bill which has been indicated by him may then be considered. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. CARTER. It being the understanding that at that time the pending order will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota object to all of the requests or to only one?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; to everything that requires unanimous consent. Let us dispose of the pending bill and then take up other matters. I do not want to bind the future.

Mr. HOAR. I rose before the unanimous consent was given to insist that my request should be coupled with it as one consent. The Chair did not state it so, but on the whole I will not interfere. It has been stated the other way, and I will let it go. I will ask for it at the end of the order secured by the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota object to the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOAR. My bill has already been made a special order, and it is merely notice that it is to come up.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not see why it requires unanimous consent to do what the Senator from Connecticut desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent or a vote of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It would lay aside the Army bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us take a vote of the Senate, then. I do not know that I object to the treaties, although I did object to one of them in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects to the request of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will not have the roll called.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut is, I think, going to move to take up the bill, for the Army bill, of course, would be resumed instantly. The displacing of the Army bill makes no difference.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not going to make any motion which will displace the Army bill or its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up the judicial salary bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to take up for present consideration a bill the title of which will be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not displace the proposition to take up the agreements with these two Indian tribes.

Mr. HOAR. I do not, but the Senator from Connecticut waived it. If he insists on it, I shall not make any objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Your proposition is to take up the bill to increase the salaries of the Federal judges?

Mr. HOAR. I made it because the Senator from Connecticut first waived his request. Otherwise I should not have intervened.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not waive it, but the Senator from South Dakota has objected to it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not object to the consideration of these agreements.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota withdraws his objection. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection being withdrawn, the bill is before the Senate for its consideration, and will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the desire of the committee that the amendments of the committee shall be acted upon as they are reached?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the committee may be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments shall be acted upon as the bill is read. If there be no objection, that order is entered. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 8, line 20, before the words "laid out," to strike out "and" and after the words "laid out" to strike out the following:

Under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, into town lots, necessary streets, alleys, and parks, conforming to existing surveys, where made by the Creek Nation, as far as may be, giving to each town such territory as may be required for its present needs and reasonable prospective growth; and the surveyors shall prepare five correct plats of each town, under such rules as may be provided by the Secretary of the Interior, and forward same to said Secretary for his approval, and when approved by him he shall retain one of said plats and transmit one to the principal chief, one to the clerk of the United States court within the jurisdiction of which the town is located, one to the town authorities, and one to the Dawes Commission: Provided, That the survey and appraisement of the lots in the towns in the Creek Nation for which town-site commissioners have heretofore been appointed shall be prosecuted and completed by said commissions now engaged in such work under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; but the payment of the purchase money for all lots and parcels of land shall be made and titles conveyed as provided in this agreement: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, where, in his judgment, the public interests will be thereby subserved, may permit the authorities of any town in said nation, at the expense of the town, to survey, lay out, and plat the site thereof, subject to his supervision and approval, as in other instances.

And to insert:

And appraised under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 11, in the following words:

11. There shall be an appraisement committee appointed for each town, who shall, after survey has been completed, appraise all town lots therein at their true value at the time of appraisement, considering the location, surroundings, and advantages of the town, but not the improvements on such town site, and shall appraise the improvements on each town lot separately, and such appraisement shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior and approved by him before becoming effective. If a majority of the members of a committee fail to agree upon the value of any lot, the value thereof shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, in the following words:

Each appraisement committee shall consist of one member to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one by the principal chief, and one by the town authorities, neither of whom shall be interested in any town lot or lands in the town for which he is appointed, except one lot upon which he may reside. Each member of such committees shall be entitled to compensation only for the time he is actually employed in the discharge of his duties, and may at any time, for good cause, be removed by the Secretary of the Interior.

All controversies between claimants to the possession of any town lot or parcel of land in any town shall be decided by the appraisement committee.

If the principal chief or town authorities fail to appoint a member of any appraisement committee, the appointment may be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (13) 11, page 11, line 13, after the word "appraisement," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to make the section read:

11. Any person in rightful possession of any town lot having improvements thereon, other than temporary buildings, fencing, and tillage, shall have the right to purchase such lot by paying one-half of the appraised value thereof; but if he shall fail within sixty days to purchase such lot and make the first payment thereon, as herein provided, the lot and improvements shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, under direction of the appraisement commission, at a price not less than their appraised value, and the purchaser shall pay the purchase price to the owner of the improvements, less the appraised value of the lot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (17) 15, page 12, line 18, after the word "appraisement," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to read:

15. When the appraisement of any town lot is made, upon which any person has improvements as aforesaid, said appraisement commission shall notify him of the amount of said appraisement, and he shall, within sixty days thereafter, make payment of 10 per cent of the amount due for the lot, as herein provided, and four months thereafter he shall pay 15 per cent additional, and the remainder of the purchase money in three equal annual installments, without interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section (20) 18, page 13, line 22, after the word "appraisement," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" and in line 1, page 14, after the word "said," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to make the section read:

18. The surveyors may select and locate a cemetery within suitable distance from each town, to embrace such number of acres as may be deemed necessary for such purpose, and the appraisement commission shall appraise the same at not less than $20 per acre, and the town may purchase the land by paying the appraised value thereof; and if any citizen have improvements thereon, other than fencing and tillage, they shall be appraised by said commission and paid for by the town. The town authorities shall dispose of the lots in such cemetery at reasonable prices, in suitable sizes for burial purposes, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the general improvement of the property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, to strike out section 50, as follows:

50. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to provide rules and regulations for the leasing of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, and other minerals on the unallotted and unselected portion of the land within the Creek country, and all such leases shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior, and any lease for any such minerals otherwise made shall be absolutely void. No lease shall be made or renewed for a longer period than fifteen years, nor cover the mineral in more than 160 acres of land, which shall conform as nearly as possible to the surveys. Lessees shall pay on each oil, gas, coal, asphalt, or other mineral claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $300 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years, and $500, in advance, for each succeeding year thereafter, as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made. All such payments shall be a credit on royalty when each said mine is developed and operated and its production is in excess of such guaranteed annual advanced payments, and all lessees must pay said annual advanced payments on each claim, whether developed or undeveloped; and should any lessee neglect or refuse to pay such advanced annual royalty for the period of sixty days after the same becomes due and payable on any lease, the lease on which default is made shall become null and void, and the royalties paid in advance shall then become and be the money and property of the tribe: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interest shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to payment of advance royalties as herein provided, when such leases are not operated, to the rate of royalty on coal mined, and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases; but if said lease covers any land which has been selected or allotted then the royalty for the part of said land so selected or allotted shall be paid to the person to whom the allotment has been made or to the person who has made the selection: Provided further, That when, under the customs and laws heretofore existing and prevailing in the Creek Nation, leases have been made of different groups or parcels of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, and possession has been taken thereunder and improvements made for the development of such oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits by lessees or their assigns, which have resulted in the production of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral in commercial quantities by such lessees or their assigns, such leases are hereby approved for a period of not to exceed fifteen years from the date of the lease and for not more than 160 acres of land, and such parties in possession shall be given preference in the making of new leases, in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior; and in making new leases due consideration shall be made for the improvements of such lessees, and in all cases of the leasing or renewal of leases of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, and other mineral deposits preferences shall be given to parties in possession who have made improvements. The rate of royalty to be paid by all lessees shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the royalty which shall become due under the terms of leases heretofore made or under new leases made under the provisions of this act shall be paid, if on unallotted or unselected lands, to the Creek tribe; but if on allotted or selected land, then the same shall be paid to the allottee or to the member of the tribe who has made the selection: Provided further, That members of said tribe who have made selections or to whom allotments have been made may lease their selections or allotments for the development of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits and receive the royalty for the same, but before operations shall be begun upon the land owned or controlled by any person, for the development of oil or gas, the lessee or party operating shall pay to the allottee or owner of the said land the value of the use of the necessary surface for prospecting or mining and the damage to be done to the other land and improvements of said allottee or owner, the value to be ascertained under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That no lease provided for in this section shall be of force or effect until the consent of the allottee is obtained in writing and until the same is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in no case shall the lease provided for in this section interfere with allotments or cover the 40-acre homestead provided for in this bill, or in any case cover more land than is allotted to any one allottee, exclusive of his homestead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH THE CHEROKEES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The same consent extends to House bill 11820.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11820) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 9, section 15, line 6, after the word "surveyed," to strike out the word "and;" and in line 7, after the word "out," to strike out:

Under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, into town lots, necessary streets, alleys, and parks, conforming to existing surveys where made by the Cherokee Nation, as far as may be, giving to each town such territory as may be required for its present needs and reasonable prospective growth; and the surveyors shall prepare five correct plats of each town and forward same to the Secretary for his approval, and when approved by him he shall retain one of said plats and transmit one to the principal chief, one to the clerk of the United States court within the jurisdiction of which the town is located, one to the town authorities, and one to the Dawes Commission: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, where in his judgment the public interests will be thereby subserved, may permit the authorities of any town in said nation, at the expense of the town, to survey, lay out, and plat the site thereof, subject to his supervision and approval as in other instances.

And to insert:

And appraised under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1900.

So as to make the section read:

15. All towns in the Cherokee Nation having a present population of 200 or more shall be surveyed, laid out, and appraised under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out sections 16, 17, and 18, as follows:

16. There shall be a town-site committee for each town, which shall, after survey has been completed, appraise all town lots therein at their true value at the time of appraisement, considering the location, surroundings, and advantages of the town but not the improvements erected on such town site, and shall appraise the improvements on each town lot separately; and such appraisements shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior and approved by him before becoming effective. If a majority of the members of a committee fail to agree upon the value of any lot, the value thereof shall be fixed by the Secretary.

17. Each town-site committee shall consist of one member to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one by the principal chief, and one by the town authorities, neither of whom shall be interested in any town lot or lands in the town for which he is appointed, except one lot upon which he may reside. Each member of such committee shall be entitled to compensation only for the time he is actually employed in the discharge of his duties, and he may at any time, for good cause, be removed by the Secretary of the Interior. In case the principal chief or the town authorities fail to appoint a member of any town-site committee as herein provided, then and in that event the appointment may be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

18. All controversies between claimants for the possession of any town lot or parcel of land in any town shall be decided by a majority of such town-site committee, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (22) 19, on page 12, line 11, after the words "approved the," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" and in line 21, after the word "town-site," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to make the section read:

19. When the appraisement of any town lot so improved is made and approved the commission shall notify the claimant thereof of the amount of appraisement, and he shall, within sixty days thereafter, make payment of 10 per cent of the amount due for the lot, and four months thereafter he shall pay 15 per cent additional, and the remainder of the purchase money he shall pay in three equal annual installments without interest; but if the owner of any such lot fail to purchase same and make first and second payments aforesaid within the time aforesaid, the lot and improvements shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, under the direction of the town-site commission, at a price not less than their appraised value; and the purchaser shall pay the purchase price to the owner of the improvements, less the appraised value of the lot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, in section 31, line 17, after the word "town-site," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to read:

31. The town authorities may select and locate, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, a cemetery within suitable distance from each town, to embrace such number of acres as may be deemed necessary for such purpose, and the town-site commission shall appraise the same at its true value, and the town may purchase same by paying such value; and if any citizen have improvements thereon, other than fencing and tillage, they shall be appraised by said committee and paid for by the town.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (35) 32, page 16, line 12, before the word "appointed," to strike out "committee" and insert "commission;" so as to make the section read:

32. All towns now in existence where there are two or more places of business and less than 200 inhabitants may be surveyed and laid out into town lots and necessary streets and alleys and platted as other towns, each to embrace such amount of land as may be deemed necessary, not exceeding 40 acres, which survey may be made in manner provided for other towns, and the appraisement of the town lots of said towns may be made by any commission appointed for either of the other towns having 200 inhabitants or more; and all lots in said towns having thereon improvements other than temporary buildings, fencing, and tillage may be purchased by any person having rightful possession thereof and owning the improvements thereon by paying one-half the appraised value. The survey, appraisement, and sale of lots shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 6, to strike out section 82, as follows:

82. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to provide rules and regulations for the leasing of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, and other minerals on the unallotted and unsettled portion of the lands within the Cherokee country, and all such leases shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior; and any lease for any such minerals otherwise made shall be absolutely void. No lease shall be made or renewed for a longer period than fifteen years, nor cover the mineral in more than 100 acres of land, which shall conform as nearly as possible to the surveys. Lessees shall pay on each oil, gas, coal, asphalt, or other mineral claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $200 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years, and $500, in advance, for each succeeding year thereafter, as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made. All such payments shall be a credit on royalty when each said mine is developed and operated and its production is in excess of such guaranteed annual advanced payments; and all lessees must pay said annual advanced payments on each claim, whether developed or undeveloped; and should any lessee neglect or refuse to pay such advanced annual royalty for the period of sixty days after the same becomes due and payable on any lease, the lease on which default is made shall become null and void, and the royalties paid in advance shall then become and be the money and property of the tribe: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interest shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to payment of advance royalties as herein provided, when such leases are not operated, to the rate of royalty on coal mined, and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases, but if said lease covers any land which has been selected or allotted, then the royalty for the part of said land so selected or allotted shall be paid to the person to whom the allotments have been made or to the person who has made the selection: Provided further, That when under the customs and laws heretofore existing and prevailing in the Indian Territory, leases have been made of different groups or parcels of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, and possession has been taken thereunder and improvements made for the development of such oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, by lessees or their assigns, which have resulted in the production of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, or other mineral in commercial quantities by such lessees or their assigns, such leases are hereby approved for a period not to exceed fifteen years from the date of the lease, and for not more than 100 acres of land, and such parties in possession shall be given preference in the making of new leases, in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior; and in making new leases due consideration shall be made for the improvements of such lessees, and in all cases of the leasing or renewal of leases of oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral deposits preference shall be given to parties in possession who have made improvements. The rate of royalty to be paid by all lessees shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the royalty which shall become due under the terms of leases heretofore made or under new leases made under the provisions of this act shall be paid, if on unallotted or unselected lands, to the Cherokee Nation, but if on allotted or selected land, then the same shall be paid to the allottee or to the member of the tribe who has made the selection: Provided further, That members of said tribes who have made selections, or to whom allotments have been made, may lease their selections or allotments for the development of oil, gas, coal, asphalt, or other minerals, and receive the royalty for the same, but before operations shall be begun upon the lands owned or controlled by any person for the development of oil or gas the lessee or party operating shall pay to the allottee or owner of the said land the value of the use of the necessary surface for prospecting or mining and the damage done to the other land and improvements of said allottee or owner, the value to be ascertained under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That no lease provided for in this section shall be of force or effect until the consent of the allottee is obtained in writing and until the same is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in no case shall the lease provided for in this section interfere with allotments or cover the 40-acre homestead provided for in this bill, or in any case cover more land than is allotted to any one allottee, exclusive of his homestead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYEES OF WILLIAM M. JACOBS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5324) for the relief of the employees of William M. Jacobs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him; which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I shall not object to this bill, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] gave notice that at the end of the bills which have been brought here by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] he would ask the Senate to take up the judicial salaries bill. I have sent for the Senator from Massachusetts. In his absence I shall feel constrained to object to anything else until he gets here, but I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because he is already in.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask to have the bill read, then, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. From what committee does that bill come?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have some explanation of it. Is there a report accompanying it?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly there is. This bill has already passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. That may be.

Mr. PENROSE. The factory of Mr. Jacobs was seized by the United States Government and sold under process of law. The object of this bill is to pay to the employees the wages unpaid and due to the date of the seizure. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] was, I believe, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at the time of the seizure, or shortly thereafter, and he can explain the matter better than I can. The report of the Senate committee I have in my hand, which I can show to the Senator or have read. I ask to have the report read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the bill involves a principle——

Mr. PENROSE. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for information, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MCCUMBER May 16, 1900, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5324) for the relief of the employees of William M. Jacobs, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit as their report the report (No. 435) of the Committee on Claims of the House, adopting the same in full as the report of this committee, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5324) for the relief of the employees of William M. Jacobs, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

"This is a bill enacting that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be authorized and directed to pay to the employees of William M. Jacobs who were employed between April 10, 1899, and April 19, 1899, inclusive, in his cigar factory at Lancaster, Pa., such sums of money as may be respectively due them for their labor during such period, not exceeding $20 to any one employee and not exceeding $2,705 for all, the said sums to be paid by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue after he shall be satisfied as to the identity of the various employees and the correctness of the respective amounts due them, and to be paid out of the moneys in the Treasury received from the sale of cigars seized in the factory of the said William M. Jacobs and forfeited for violation of the internal-revenue law.

"In the spring of 1899 William M. Jacobs, while doing business as William M. Jacobs & Co., as extensive cigar manufacturers, was found to be carrying on fraudulent operations by means of counterfeit cigar stamps. They were also engaged in counterfeiting the securities of the Government. The amount of tax upon the cigars which had been marketed by the parties under counterfeit stamps was estimated, from the best obtainable evidence, at $143,688.49. Of this amount the sum of $136,811.88 was assessed against them, the balance being barred by the statute of limitations from assessment. William M. Jacobs was arrested and has been criminally prosecuted and convicted. The cigar factory was seized by the collector of internal revenue, with its contents, on April 26, 1899. Seizures have also been made of the product of the Jacobs factory in various parts of the country, which product was covered by counterfeit stamps.

"The property seized in the factory of William M. Jacobs was distrained by the collector and sold. The net proceeds of this sale were $28,200, which amount was credited to the assessment against William M. Jacobs & Co. There have also been credited amounts totaling $2,253.31, which were received from more than fifty customers of William M. Jacobs & Co., which customers were indebted to the company for cigars purchased. Total amount secured by the Government, $30,453.31.

"The relief asked for is for wages due to workmen and workwomen employed by William M. Jacobs & Co. up to the date of the seizure of the factory by the collector, to wit, April 26, 1899. Inasmuch as the Government has had the benefit of the labor of said employees, and the said William M. Jacobs & Co. having no property by reason of the seizure, the committee think that in equity those employed by this company, and under these circumstances, should be paid out of the moneys in the United States Treasury received from the sale of the cigars seized in the factory of William M. Jacobs & Co., as provided in the bill.

"Your committee therefore report favorably and recommend that the bill do pass."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am rather impressed with the notion that there may be some underlying equity in the proposition contained in this bill, but it is a precedent which obviously would have very large application. As it is a House bill and the passage of it will not be endangered by a fair consideration of it in the Senate, I hope the Senator will not press it this afternoon. I do not mean by this to indicate any final objection to the bill, but it is a matter that deserves to be carefully examined—I mean with reference to the principle.

Mr. HOAR. Let it go over one day.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course I will have to let it pass over if the Senator desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to kindly yield to me.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow the bill to be taken up, I will then yield to him and to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3450) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move to take up the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the bill not to be taken up by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] objects to its consideration. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MORGAN. I make the point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What point of order does the Senator make?

Mr. HOAR. I am not going to force this bill on the Senator from Alabama if, for any reason, he does not want it taken up now. So he need not resort to points of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not in the slightest degree opposed to the Senator's bill, but there is a certain order of business that I do not want to have interrupted by a vote of the Senate. A vote of the Senate to take up this bill will displace the Army bill absolutely, and another vote will be required on Monday to take up that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. May I be allowed one suggestion to the Senator and to the Chair? The Army bill is now taken up every morning after the morning hour, and there is no displacing that by any other bill.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator is mistaken. The Army bill has been taken up by a vote of the Senate, and it displaced the subsidy bill.

Mr. HOAR. I have not yet completed my sentence. The Army bill will be taken up, as a matter of course, on a motion in the morning hour on Monday, which is the legislative to-morrow. This does not interfere with it. The Army bill does not stand with any right until 2 o'clock on Monday, and long before that time we shall have had a motion to take it up, and I presume will agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would again state that this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; and I am simply speaking to the question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A question of order has not been submitted, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be allowed to finish my sentence, I shall have finished what I had to say.

So that if the judicial-salaries bill is taken up it will not do any practical injury to the Army bill.

I will state, however, to my honorable friend from Alabama that I do not want to force this bill onto a reluctant Senate or onto any particular reluctant Senator. If he does not, for any reason, want it taken up this afternoon, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. MORGAN. My point of order was this: The Senate was proceeding with the consideration of the Army bill, and by a unanimous consent agreement took up the Indian contracts. Those bills have been acted on with the understanding, of course, that the Army bill was not to be superseded by anything else. Now comes a motion to take up the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts by a vote of the Senate. If that vote is in the affirmative, it will, of course, displace the Army bill, and that will make it necessary to take up the Army bill again by a vote.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again remind Senators that this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. I was only trying to state my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to listen to the Senator's point of order.

Mr. HALE. Let me say on the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in the slightest degree in hostility to the consideration of the Army bill. It is simply to utilize the hours this afternoon in the passage of important legislation. The Senator in charge of the Army bill stated that he did not propose to go on further this afternoon. Everybody knows that when Monday comes the Senate, by a large majority, will take up the Army bill.

Mr. HOAR. In the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. In the morning hour, directly after the routine business shall have been concluded. That bill being temporarily out of the way, if anybody objects to unanimously taking up any other bill, the only refuge is to make the motion which the Senator from Massachusetts has made to take up the bill in his charge. That will not interfere with the Army bill in the least.

Mr. BERRY. It will displace the Army bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw my objection, and will allow the bill to come up.

Mr. HALE. The Senator withdraws his objection. Then let the bill be taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand now that the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts is before the Senate by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have the floor long enough, as I have got it, to at least state my proposition. I understand, the Senator from South Dakota having withdrawn his objection, that——

Mr. BERRY. I renew the objection, I will state to the Senator before he goes any further. I object to this increase salary bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] objects to the consideration of the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts has asked to have taken up.

Mr. HOAR. Then I make the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Army bill is to be displaced, I demand the regular order of business, which is the Nicaragua Canal bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Army reorganization bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that can only be displaced by a motion or by unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated. The motion is not debatable. It is the duty of the Chair to put that motion to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I will say that I will not ask a vote upon the judicial bill this afternoon if any single Senator objects to a vote, as I am informed that one does. So I shall not ask for a vote on it, but only that it be taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. Why does the Senator want to take it up, if there is to be no vote upon it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to prevail.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the motion to take up the bill.

FREDERICK MEHRING.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6344) to remove the charges of desertion from the records of the War Department against Frederick Mehring.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the records of the War Department now standing against Frederick Mehring, late a private of Company C, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. BATE. Has the bill been before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate?

Mr. QUARLES. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that this bill, which has been passed by the House of Representatives, has been reported by the Military Affairs Committee of both Houses. It is a meritorious measure in every way.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALLS BY THE SENATE ON EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS obtained the floor.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me, that I may submit a resolution?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I present a resolution, which I ask to have printed and laid over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia presents a resolution, which will be read for information, subject to objection.

Mr. BACON. I do not understand that anybody objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No bill or resolution can be introduced at this time except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. Nobody objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read, subject to objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That any and every public document, paper, or record on the files of any Department of the Government relating to any subject whatever over which Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control under the Constitution, is subject to the call or inspection of the Senate for its use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the presentation of the resolution at this time? The Chair hears none. It will be considered as introduced, and at the request of the Senator from Georgia it will go over and be printed.

MARION TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4099) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator—this is a very old claim—what objection has been interposed by the Department to its adjustment?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The facts are stated in the report which the committee make, accompanying the bill. The claim has been pending before the Department. Its payment is recommended, as I recollect, by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. KEAN. It is a very good bill. I reported it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I state that subject to correction, the report not being at hand at present.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the report a long one?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There is a report, but it is not a very long one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report submitted by Mr. KEAN June 2, 1900, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4099) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, having considered the same, hereby adopt House Report No. 207 as a part of this report, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The report is as follows:

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4099) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, late of Indianapolis, Ind., for services rendered as mail contractor on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., from April 1 to June 6, 1861, inclusive, have carefully considered the same and recommend the passage of the bill.

"The facts in this case will be found stated in a letter of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department filed with the committee, and is as follows, to wit:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, D. C., May 19, 1897.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 18th instant, relative to the claim of Mr. Samuel Milliken, of Indianapolis, Ind., for mail service performed by his father in the State of Kentucky in 1861, I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show that Samuel Milliken, deceased, was mail contractor on route No. 9704, from Paducah, Ky., to Iuka, Miss., in 1861; that he was paid in full to March 31, 1861, and that a balance stands to his credit for service from April 1 to June 6, 1861, the date to which service has been certified, amounting to $901.92.

"This claim was reported to Congress in 1883 for appropriation, but no provision has yet been made for its payment. Many of this class of claims were paid by the Confederate States government, but the Confederate records (mutilated) now in the custody of this office do not show, so far as they go, that any payment was made to Mr. Milliken for service under his contract with the United States.

"Reports similar to the above have been made to Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET, to Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE, House of Representatives, and to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, December 14, 1896.

"Very respectfully,
"HENRY A. CASTLE, Auditor.

"Hon. C. W. FAIRBANKS,
"United States Senate."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The bill (S. 1773) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., is now on the Calendar, reported from the Senate committee. The bill which has just been passed is the House bill. In order to relieve the Calendar I move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, informally laying aside the regular order.

Mr. BERRY. There are some other small bills that could be passed Saturday afternoon. Will not the Senator permit us to pass a few more bills?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the best disposition of the time for two hours would be to go on with the appropriation bill. If there is any controversy over any particular amendment, I will waive its consideration. I will say to the Senator that it will greatly relieve me if I can get the bill on its way.

Mr. BERRY. I will not antagonize the chairman of the Appropriations Committee under any circumstances, but a number of Senators have had an opportunity to pass private bills, and I think late Saturday evening some others ought to have an opportunity. However, I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects.

PRODUCTION AND SALE OF MILK IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4804) to regulate the production and sale of milk and cream in and for the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 2, page 3, line 25, before the word "degrees," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

That none but pure, unadulterated milk or cream, which has been properly cooled and preserved at a temperature below 60° F., shall be brought into said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 4, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no person shall be convicted under the provisions of this section who produces evidence satisfactory to the court before which he is tried that he did not know and could not with due diligence have obtained knowledge of the condition of the cow which rendered her unsuitable for the production of milk for sale within the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 11, after the word "after," to strike out "milking" and insert "coming into his possession;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That no person shall in said District sell any milk or cream, or hold or offer any milk or cream for sale, which is not clean and wholesome and free from foreign substances, nor unless the same has been cooled immediately after coming into his possession to a temperature not exceeding 50° F., and is and has been constantly kept below such temperature, nor under any misrepresentation in respect thereof as to name or quality, or as being what the same is not as respects wholesomeness, soundness, or safety.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, page 10, line 8, after the word "sale," to insert:

No person shall, in the District of Columbia, have milk or cream in bottles, or other receptacles intended to be left with consumers, in or about any vehicle in which milk or cream for sale is being carried in bulk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 14, line 24, after the word "District," to insert "at the instance of the health office of said District;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, at the instance of the health officer of said District, upon information brought in the name of the District of Columbia and on its behalf.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALGODONES GRANT, IN ARIZONA.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11213) for the relief of occupants of lands included in the Algodones grant, in Arizona.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he does not think a part of the preamble ought to be in the body of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. This is a House measure and has passed that body. It was framed in that way. The report covers it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is very badly framed.

Mr. BERRY. I think it is entirely satisfactory to all the parties concerned. It is a just measure, to which there is no objection from any section. I hope it will pass just as it came from the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

EDWARD BYRNE.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 97) for the relief of Edward Byrne.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward Byrne, late a captain in the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry and late a lieutenant-colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment of Veteran Cavalry Volunteers, State of New York, a captain of cavalry in the Army of the United States, with his original rank and date of commission, to be placed upon the retired list of the Army with the rank of captain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4880) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right to the Omaha Northern Railway Company to construct a railway across, and establish stations on, the Omaha and Winnebago reservations, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," by extending the time for the construction of said railway.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN NEBRASKA AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. THURSTON. I have one other bill of the same kind, relating to the same reservations, and I ask for its consideration at the present time. It is the bill (S. 3349) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," by extending the time for the construction of said railway.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2237) setting apart certain public grounds in the city of Washington for the use of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the erection of a memorial building. It is a bill which the Daughters of the American Revolution are very anxious to have passed, and they have frequently called upon me and asked me to call it up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire action upon the amendment sent up by him with the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, in line 10, after the word "cease" it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no building of any kind shall be erected upon any public park or reservation in the District of Columbia, except for the use of the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. What effect will that have upon the bill itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is uncertain as to whether this is an amendment reported by the committee or an amendment intended to be offered to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very good amendment, I will say, Mr. President.

Mr. SCOTT. It is an amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri, who is a member of our committee.

Mr. VEST. Yes; I suggested that amendment in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds offers the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object to the consideration of the bill. I understand that it proposes to donate some one of the public parks to a society for the erection of a building. So far as I am concerned, I shall oppose the donation of any park for the purpose of erecting buildings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects.

DAM ACROSS OSAGE RIVER, WARSAW, MO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11588) permitting the building of a dam across the Osage River at the city of Warsaw, Benton County, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL PARKS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4436) providing a means of acquiring title to two groves of Sequoia gigantea, in the State of California, with a view to making national parks thereof.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that title may be acquired by the United States for the purpose of establishing public parks or pleasure grounds for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, and for the further purpose of preserving the groves of mammoth trees, known as Sequoia gigantea, and other natural curiosities and wonders found upon the south half of section 15 and the north half of section 22, in township 5 north, range 15 east, and all of sections 29, 30, 31, and 32, in township 5 north, range 16 east, Monte Diable meridian, in the State of California.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, on page 3, line 11, after the word "Interior," to strike out:

And if in his judgment the public purpose to be subserved justifies the payment of the compensation so ascertained he shall, within ninety days after such ascertainment, notify the Treasurer of the United States thereof, who shall forthwith pay into said court the compensation so to be made by the United States to the several persons in interest, and thereupon a judgment shall be.

And to insert:

Who shall transmit the same to Congress, when in session, with his recommendation. If Congress shall not act favorably thereon before final adjournment of such session, then such condemnation proceedings shall be at an end and judgment of dismissal in said condemnation proceedings be entered; but if favorable action shall be taken by Congress and upon the payment into court of the compensation to be made by the United States to the several persons in interest, judgment shall be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, after the word "State," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase the said premises at a sum not exceeding $125,000 without condemnation proceedings, in which event the sum of $125,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. G. MARTIN.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up the bill (S. 2470) for the relief of G. G. Martin. It is a short bill of 4 lines.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of War to issue to G. G. Martin, late lieutenant-colonel First United States Colored Troops, an honorable discharge as of the date he left the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOORES CREEK BATTLEFIELD, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2270) appropriating $10,000 to inclose and beautify the monument on the Moores Creek battlefield, North Carolina.

The bill was read, it having been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to pay to the governor of the State of North Carolina the sum of $5,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be by him transferred to the Moores Creek Monumental Association, incorporated by the legislature of the State of North Carolina, for the purpose of repairing the monument already erected on said battlefield and for inclosing and beautifying the same.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina what battlefield that is.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a Revolutionary battlefield—Moores Creek.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator give us an account of the battle? It is known probably by some other name.

Mr. BUTLER. It was one of the first encounters in the South during the Revolutionary war. It was fought between the Tories and the American patriots, and a decisive victory was won by the patriots. What the battle of Lexington was to the northern colonies, the battle of Moores Creek was to the southern colonies.

The British were preparing to invade the province of North Carolina and to suppress the spirit of independence, which was more forward in my State, I can say with pardonable pride, than in the sister States. The Tory Highland Scotchmen living at Cross Creek, near my home, and in what was then a part of my county, under General McDonald, were endeavoring to reach the Cape Fear for a junction with Sir Henry Clinton and Lord William Campbell with a large force, who, with Lord Cornwallis, expected every hour, were to begin the subjugation of the province, when, on the 27th of February, 1776, the Tories encountered at Moores Creek Bridge, about 18 miles from Wilmington, the American forces under Colonels Caswell and Lillington. A battle ensued, the Americans being intrenched south of the bridge, and the first glorious victory was won in the South. The Americans lost but one man, the slain of the enemy being computed at 50; 850 prisoners captured, and the trophies of the day being 1,500 excellent rifles, 350 guns, 150 swords and dirks, 2 medicine chests, 13 wagons, horses, and harness, and a box of English guineas worth $75,000.

The effect of the victory was to give to the American soldiers about to enter upon a seven years' war military experience and an intelligent confidence in themselves. It compelled the haughty oppressors to respect their skill and prowess. It frustrated the great scheme to subjugate North Carolina, and emboldened the people of this province, who already in Mecklenberg had declared their independence in mass meeting, to meet in a provincial congress on the 12th of April, 1776, and pass a unanimous resolution appointing delegates to the Continental Congress and instructing them "to concur with the delegates of the other colonies in declaring independence and forming foreign alliances," thus in advance of all the other colonies calling upon the nation—the United Provinces—to sanction by their united voice what had already been so nobly done by a portion of her citizens.

The North Carolina legislature has appropriated money to help build the monument, and besides a considerable amount has been donated by private individuals. A monument has been erected and a small part of the battlefield bought, but it is now desired to enlarge the grounds, improve and beautify them, and to repair the monument, which is in need of repair. The legislature has incorporated the Moores Creek Monumental Association, which has charge of the grounds and under whose direction the money now asked of Congress will be spent.

There are many precedents for the appropriation of money by Congress for such a purpose. I looked up fifteen or twenty such precedents and laid them before the Committee on the Library when they had the bill under consideration.

I will not take up the time of the Senate to make a further statement unless it is desired, for surely no one can oppose such a patriotic and meritorious measure, that calls for so small an appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I will not object, but the State of Massachusetts has built its own monuments at Bunker Hill, Concord, Lexington, and other like places. We had some Tories, and suppressed them, too. But it is a little tough after paying all our own expenses to then pay the expenses of North Carolina. I think they ought to build their monuments also. But it is a good, patriotic purpose, and it is in the Senator's own county, and of course there ought to be a monument there, wherever the battlefield was. So I will not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill appropriating $5,000 to inclose and beautify the monument on the Moores Creek battlefield, North Carolina."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1901, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 5, 1901.

AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Frederick E. Rittman, of Ohio, to be Auditor for the War Department.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 5, 1901.

The House was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1901.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby designate and name Mr. JOHN DALZELL, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, to perform the duties of the Chair during this day, January 5, 1901.

D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DALZELL accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REAPPORTIONMENT.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the apportionment bill that is under consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 12740) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Twelfth Census.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] has the right to the floor this morning.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I look upon the pending measure as one of the most important that can engage the attention of the members of this House. It provides for the apportionment of Representatives, and upon that basis is fixed the membership in the electoral college and representation in the various national conventions.

I hope I may be able to approach the discussion of this question upon the basis that the House is disposed to act fairly, equitably, and justly. If the mild, courteous, disinterested, and patriotic speech of the chairman of this committee [Mr. HOPKINS] is any criterion of the real purpose of this bill, its title might well be changed so that it might read: "An act to cripple the State of Maine in her representation on the floor of this House, and incidentally to apportion Representatives in accordance with the numbers of the people elsewhere."

I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that the State of Maine is not entitled to the same consideration in connection with this measure that she would be in connection with any other that might come before this House. I do not feel obliged to stand here in the opening of an address in connection with this great question, the purpose of which is the support of the report of the minority represented by the Burleigh bill, with any suggestion like that which the chairman was obliged to make in his speech to the House yesterday, when he stated that the committee had not been able to report a bill that would do equal and exact justice to all the States. It may well be that the chairman of the committee had so much in his mind the purpose, apparently, of this legislation that he could not prepare a bill to accomplish that result. The chairman has taken occasion to assault the State of Maine in connection with this proposition. His suggestion is that the State of Maine has not increased in her population; that she is unprogressive and behind the procession.

I submit that the facts do not warrant the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois. The State of Maine has not decreased in her population. She has not confined her population within the geographical limits of the State of Maine; but the State of Maine during the last few decades has been growing up throughout all the States of the Union. Wherever there has been occasion for development and progress, there Maine has been. Wherever there has been occasion for the manifestation of brawn and brain, there Maine has been.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman says I attacked Maine yesterday. Did I not state that Maine had not increased in her population to exceed 10 per cent during this period, but that her sons and daughters had populated the great West?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, the gentleman does not wish to get uneasy so early in the discussion as this.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not uneasy, but I do not desire any unfairness.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, the gentleman did state that she had sent her sons and daughters elsewhere, and well the gentleman might state it. In the thirties a son of Maine by the name of Lovejoy went to Illinois, and there he received outrage and murder, and his blood watered the soil of Illinois.

The State of Maine does not regret the sacrifice thus made. Inasmuch as the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church, we trust that what has been our loss is her gain. Aye, the State of Maine has sent its representatives elsewhere. Later it sent into the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago a distinguished citizen of the Republic, who from the home of his adoption went to the head of the highest tribunal in the United States, where he now presides with great grace, dignity, and ability—Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, of the Supreme Court of the United States, a native of the State of Maine. I think the gentleman from Illinois will recognize the fact that Maine is not behind, but leads the procession, even in Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, now, if the gentleman will wait one moment——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I can well understand——

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman need not refer to the gentleman from Illinois upon that point, because in my argument on yesterday I took exactly the same position.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then the gentleman need not worry about its being a contradiction of his speech.

Mr. HOPKINS. You say that I made an assault upon Maine. I deny it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I say that your speech from start to finish was saturated with a pettifogging attack on the State of Maine.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, now, I deny it. I am not as familiar with pettifogging as the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will prove it out of the RECORD itself.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all right enough if the gentleman from Maine thinks he can effect anything in that way, because if there is any man who knows better than another what can be done in that way it is the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I trust the gentleman will continue to stultify himself in the future.

Mr. HOPKINS. Talk to me about stultifying myself; I deny having done anything of the kind.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will demonstrate that you did.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; you will do wonderful things.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not the gentleman getting a little touchy in that direction?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman can stand up or sit down, just as he likes. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. That is just what I am going to do.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is just exactly what you are going to do.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If you have any question to ask, ask it.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. That is all right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If you have any question to ask——

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD (continuing.) Propound it, but you can not overlook the fact that you endeavored to detract from the State of Maine——

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what I deny.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will not interrupt the gentleman as long as he is fair, but when he undertakes to answer me, it is my right as a member, it is my right as the chairman of the committee, to call the attention of the House to the methods of attack that the gentleman has used on previous occasions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You need have no apprehension that the House will not hear me. You need not have any trouble about that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no apprehension of any trouble from the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If you will sit here while the speech is delivered.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman think that he is going to drive me from the floor?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, not at all. I can well understand that the gentleman from Illinois wants to inject his speech into mine. I can well understand how there can be a feeling of envy on the part of some great States because the State of Maine has won the distinguished position that she has maintained on this floor by her great delegations during the last two decades. It may be that the chairman of this committee may have some motive that has not been clearly disclosed in his speech upon this floor.

Well, the gentleman smiles. I will exclude the State of Illinois from the suggestion that some have occasion to inveigh against the State of Maine by reason of her honor, her glory, and her renown that she has acquired on this floor so long as the distinguished chairman of the committee, representing a part of the State of Illinois with his great skill, his supereminent ability, his great disingenuousness and patriotism, simply overslaughs the State of Illinois with glory and adds to her renown. He surfeits her with it. I do not hold the State of Illinois responsible for the vagaries of his argument and, if the gentleman will excuse me when I come to reach the discussion, the babbling of the chairman of this committee in connection with this question. The State of Illinois has its Representatives on this floor, and the distinguished chairman of this committee is simply a diluted extract of the aurora borealis which clings, like the shirt of Nessus, to the State of Illinois whether she will or no. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. That is a good argument for your bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman need not worry about the argument. He can not disturb the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the kind of argument to be expected from the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let the gentleman keep along with his interruptions. So much for the present suggestions, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the opening of this debate. The gentleman can not stand here and deliver himself of his censorious criticism characterized by venom and spleen during a speech of an hour and a half and then rise on the floor and say that what he said was complimenting and eulogizing the State of Maine. He can not stand here and analyze his bill on the basis that he used classic and parliamentary language charging that the State of Maine is robbing somebody of a Representative without answer. I have not read the RECORD through to see whether he edited that out of his remarks, but it was used in his speech. He can not stand here and use that argument and make that appeal without expecting some reply from a parliamentary standpoint.

So much in relation to these preliminary suggestions. What are the two bills here before us? What is the committee's bill? We submit that the bill of the committee is not in accordance with any of the precedents since 1850. There never has been a reapportionment made since 1850 that did not give to every majority fraction a Representative in the House—in two instances arbitrarily, in one instance a Representative to two minority fractions—in order to equalize the Representatives, making it more just throughout the country.

Let me give a few explanations of the basis upon which the bill is presented, and the basis also upon which the minority bill is founded. Take the majority bill of 357. They divide the total population by 357 for their result of 208,868. They take that ratio of 208,868 and divide the population in each State and get the whole numbers, and they then give an additional Representative to each majority fraction in the order of its size. On that basis this bill fails to give three States a Representative for the majority fraction. The minority bill is built precisely on the same basis.

I now call the attention of the House to the report, which, I submit, the chairman of this committee has not in all probability read. Explaining the basis of the representation adopted by the minority, the report reads:

> We take the computation based upon 384 Representatives, upon a ratio of one Representative for every 194,182 of population. As shown in Table 2 of the letter of the Director of the Census above referred to, Nebraska, with a majority fraction of 97,629, and Virginia, with a majority fraction of 106,546, each lose a Representative and get no representative for the majority fraction in either case.

I submit to the members of this House that that is a plain, straightforward, simple, clear statement of the basis on which the bill of the minority was constructed. I submit that it is so plain and so simple that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

Now, in order to illustrate the ingenuous and fair manner in which the distinguished chairman of this committee has attended to his duties, I want to read from the RECORD his assertion as to the basis of the minority report. I quote from the RECORD. Here is what he says:

> I do not know what figures he had.

That is his first statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the page?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Page 566. Now, let me read from the remarks of the gentleman again. I read from page 568:

> And they have simply adopted some method of figuring. I do not know by what process.

Here is the chairman of this committee (in the face of this declaration in this report, stating clearly, plainly, the basis of the minority bill), stating that he does not know what that basis is; that the minority have adopted some method of figuring but he does not know what it is. I submit that to this House as an illustration of the ingenuousness of the gentleman from Illinois. If he read that report he does know what the basis was, and if he does know what the basis was he is not treating this House fairly when he says he does not know. And if he has not read the report he is not fit to be the chairman of this committee and present this question to this House. Now, there is the record of the gentleman in his speech, compared with the report on file by the minority of this committee. That is, I say, simply an illustration of the ingenuousness of the chairman's argument.

Now, what do these two bills accomplish? What is the result under each? It is necessary for me to take up this question in order that we may understand the practical condition before I proceed further in the discussion.

The majority bill does not increase the membership of the House, but it decreases the membership of Indiana and Kansas one member each. Kentucky, Maine, Nebraska, Ohio, South Carolina, and Virginia lose one member each. The following States gain one: Illinois—I do not suppose that the fact that Illinois under this bill gains one member had anything to do in accentuating the patriotism of the ingenuous chairman of this committee. He stands here conceding that he has not been able to do equal and exact justice to all the States. But he succeeds in giving Illinois one additional member.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman know that the State of Illinois, since the census of 1890, has increased in population nearly a million?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. And does not the gentleman also know that in the district of his colleague, who reported this minority bill, the population under the present census is more than 300 less than it was ten years ago?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very likely.

Mr. HOPKINS. And does not that account for the fact that Illinois under any system of apportionment would increase her representation?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I noticed the fact——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will. That may account for the increase of representation; but it does not account for another fact, the nonchalance and the sangfroid with which the gentleman can stand here and advocate the adoption of a report (no matter what the other circumstances may be) that increases the representation of Illinois. It is a fair proposition; the gentleman should not get annoyed about it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I hope the gentleman does not think I am annoyed over a fact like that. The report as presented by the Director of the Census——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has the gentleman a question which he wants to ask?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to know why it is that the gentleman takes up for special comment the State of Illinois, when the census report shows that Illinois has so large an increase in population that it would be impossible to make any apportionment that would not increase her representation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have made simply a brief and passing reference to Illinois. Later on I shall discuss Illinois upon the gentleman's basis of analyzing the minority bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I rose only because the gentleman intimated to the House that in the framing of my bill there had been some reason for giving a preference to Illinois, which I deny.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I stated to the House that Illinois gained one member, and that I supposed that that did not detract from the patriotism of the gentleman from Illinois when he made this report; and I assume this may be a fair conclusion, notwithstanding the annoyance and disturbance of the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Louisiana gains 1, Minnesota gains 1.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment, please.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This is not a police court.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, then, the gentleman is not at home.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You would be at home on the frontier before a trial justice in the purlieus of civilization conducting your method of discussion. I do not care anything about the interruptions. They simply take a little more time. Now, if the gentleman has any proper question to ask, any time that he desires to propound it I will answer it if I can. Now, I say Illinois gains 1.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. The gentleman knows that I do not interrupt him when he does not attempt to misrepresent. He undertook to convey the idea that in the majority bill I had treated Illinois in a manner that other States had not been treated.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No, I did not.

Mr. HOPKINS. And he knows that by the Burleigh bill Illinois gains three additional members, while she gains only one additional member by the bill that was reported by my committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I did not make any such suggestion. I did not make any such intimation. I simply stated that the fact that Illinois gained one probably accentuated the patriotism of the gentleman from Illinois and left him where he could support this report with more nonchalance than otherwise. I did not say it was improperly given to her. It is obvious enough that the basis does give it to her, so far as that is concerned. The gentleman might have decreased this House, and I will show him before I get through on his own figures and method of computation that if he had served Illinois as in his bill he has served others, he would decrease Illinois instead of giving her an increase, and I will demonstrate that when I reach the analysis. Now, mark you, I say I will demonstrate it when I reach the analysis, and I give the gentleman the privilege then of rising if he sees fit and becoming further disturbed and further annoyed.

Mr. HOPKINS. There has been no disturbance and no annoyance.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Illinois gains 1. I repeat that, not because it is offensive to the gentleman from Illinois, but in order to have connection in the statement when I make it. Louisiana gains 1, Minnesota, New Jersey, and New York each 1, West Virginia 1, Texas 2.

What, now, is the result under the minority bill? Under the minority bill the gains are as follows:

Arkansas 1, California 1, Colorado 1, Connecticut 1, Florida 1, Louisiana 1, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, North Dakota, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin each 1. Gaining 2 are Minnesota, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. Gaining 3 are Illinois, New York, and Texas. These are the results under each of the propositions, the proposition of the minority being that this House should be so reapportioned that no State should lose in its representation.

Now, I wish to go a little further here at this stage of the discussion and call attention to the analysis of this table upon which the minority based their bill. I have taken occasion to look it over with some care for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not upon mathematical principles, determined and measured by results, it has any scientific basis upon which to stand. I have already explained that the method of reaching the number of Representatives is, after the whole numbers are ascertained, to add enough of the majority fractions in their order of size to make up the number which you started with in your computation.

I want to take this table from 350 to 400, inclusive, and show the House where that provision would arbitrarily stop in connection with the whole table. I find that in one instance on this mathematically and scientifically correct principle they would have to use a minority fraction in order to complete the number. I find that the number is completed and one majority fraction left seven times. It is completed and two majority fractions are left twenty-two times. It is completed and three majority fractions are left seven times. It is completed and four majority fractions are left four times. It is completed and five majority fractions are left four times. It is completed and six majority fractions are left twice. It is completed and a seven-majority fraction is left once, and the majority fractions are all taken three times. There is the consistency of the arbitrary result of the table made by Mr. Walker and supported by the letter read by the chairman [Mr. HOPKINS] in his speech to the House on yesterday.

Let me call attention now to several so-called paradoxes that exist in connection with this peculiar and wonderful computation upon which this bill is scientifically based, and a computation that we follow, it is true, in the minority bill, because we do not desire to raise any contention as to the methods that are adopted by either bill.

There is what is called the Alabama paradox, in connection with the census of 1891, not referred to by Mr. Walker in his letter, but referred to later, as I shall show the House in a few moments, by the official who undoubtedly did the work upon the Walker letter itself and subsequently made a report to Mr. Cox, the chairman of the same committee.

The first paradox is that Colorado gains 1 on 350 and continues to gain up to 356, and then loses on the basis of 357. That is science; that is mathematics, that Colorado can gain up to 356, beginning with 350, and when you strike 357, although the number of the House is larger, why Colorado loses. And then she immediately gains on 358. Now, I do not say that there is any purpose in it, but I suggest that there is a coincidence in the fact that Colorado is excluded from her proper representation on the basis of 357, which the committee have adopted as the basis of this majority bill.

I do not say that the chairman of this committee adopted that basis of 357, the only basis that would leave out Colorado above 350, because Populists happen to come from Colorado, as he sneeringly suggested in his speech upon this floor. I do not make that insinuation. I call attention to the remarkable coincidence, however, because I conceive, and I suppose the chairman now, if his attention were called to it, would rise and say, that he thinks that Colorado, even though her people are Populists, has the same right to a proportional representation on the floor of this House as does even godlike Illinois or even Maine, that seems to be the bugbear in the mind of the chairman of this committee.

Let me strike another paradox in connection with belabored and assaulted Maine, nonprogressive Maine, that is behind the procession, whose men in Illinois lead the procession there. Now, Maine loses on 382. She does not lose when the House is increased to 383, 384, or 385. She loses again with 386, and does not lose with 387 or 388. Then she loses again on 389 and 390, and then ceases to lose.

Not only is Maine subjected to the assaults of the chairman of this committee, but it does seem as though mathematics and science had combined to make a shuttlecock and battledoor of the State of Maine in connection with the scientific basis upon which this bill is presented to this House.

"Now you see it and now you don't." In Maine comes and out Maine goes. The House increases in size, and still she is out. It increases a little more in size, and then, forsooth, in she comes. A little further increase, and out she goes, and then a little further increase, and in she comes. God help the State of Maine when mathematics reach for her and undertake to strike her down in this manner in connection with her representation on this floor—more cruel even than the chairman of this great committee.

Let me call the attention of the House to a suggestion made from the Census Office in connection with this interesting proposition involving paradoxes. This is a letter to Mr. Walker, Superintendent of the Census. The letter of Mr. Walker is dated January 15, 1881. The letter of his chief clerk in that office, C. W. Seaton, to Mr. Walker himself, prepared in answer to a verbal inquiry by Superintendent Walker upon this same proposition, is dated October 25, 1881, more than six months after the letter of the Director to Mr. Cox. Let me read what Mr. Seaton, the chief clerk, says about this interesting mathematical proposition that is now out and now in, that you now see and now do not. He says:

While making these calculations I met with the so-called "Alabama paradox," where Alabama was allotted 8 Representatives out of a total of 299, receiving but 7 when the total became 300.

It struck him as a very unusual proceeding, or perhaps, as the great Conkling once said in an argument before the supreme court of New York, as I am informed, as a "vociferous and halcyon proceeding." He says:

Such a result as this is to me conclusive proof that the process employed in obtaining it is defective, and that it does not in fact "apportion Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers."

This conclusion has been confirmed by the discovery of other anomalies, and the result of my study of this question is the strong conviction that an entirely different process should be employed.

Now, it is true that, notwithstanding that statement from the Census Bureau, the same process was employed. But it is further true——

Mr. LONG. Mr. Walker also indorsed it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, Mr. Walker indorsed this communication of his clerk. There is the testimony of the Director of the Census upon which the chairman of the committee relies as the basis of his bill; and it is very much more reasonable than the hoary-headed discussion which he referred to, in which the great Daniel Webster engaged some time in 1840 or 1830, as to which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kansas diametrically opposed each other in their conclusions.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that if the chairman of this committee made a statement that is to be relied upon in his speech that the bill of this committee is unconstitutional 18 different times. Now, mark what I state. I say that if the chairman of this committee is to be relied upon as a constitutional lawyer—I am not now speaking of pettifoggers before trial justice courts or astute criminal lawyers, with whom my friend seems to be so familiar.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is since I became acquainted with my friend.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, sir, it would do you good to associate with a gentleman sometimes [laughter]; and I want to tell you——

Mr. HOPKINS. There is a wide difference as to whether you are a gentleman or not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When you find me making a statement on the floor of this House which is demonstrated by the report of the committee that I bring in to be a falsehood or that shows that I have not read it, then you will have occasion and some foundation for making an assault upon "the gentleman from Maine," and when I have demonstrated——

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not making an assault upon the gentleman from Maine, but if he wants to call attention to facts he is making a criticism upon the process of the Director of the Census, criticising my bill on the paradoxes that he claims to exist, and yet he professes in another part of his speech that he bases his own bill here upon the same process.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, now, I was not criticising the Director of the Census. I was calling attention to the fact that the chairman of this committee was undoubtedly a great constitutional lawyer. [Laughter.] That is what I was saying when he rose to object. [Laughter.] Do you object to being called a great constitutional lawyer? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to anything the gentleman says. I simply point out the fact that when he is making his argument in support of the Burleigh bill——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, now, is this an argument that I am making or that you are? I will try to make it interesting for the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the line of your argument.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand that the gentleman objects to being called a great constitutional lawyer? Let me read what he says and show whether his bill is constitutional from his standpoint and upon his basis:

Now, it would not be in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution to give a greater representation to the fraction than to the integral numbers.

Now, then, if that is a sound constitutional legal statement, it means simply this, that if you give 208,868 a Representative it would not be constitutional to give any less number a Representative. That is the gentleman's own statement. I quote it from the RECORD in order that he may follow it if he likes. Now, take this statement and analyze the gentleman's bill upon that basis, that no bill will be constitutional that gives a Representative in substance to a less number than the whole number. That is his proposition. How does his bill stand upon it? Well, he gives to Arkansas a Representative on the basis of 157,753.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, did I not make my position entirely clear yesterday that in order to make the apportionment there we were to deduct the fraction of 208,868 and divide the population of the several States, which would give us 335?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. That would leave a fractional population that would be entitled to a representation of 22 members, including the four States that under the Constitution are entitled to a member each. Now, does not the gentleman know that I made that clear, that we must make this division of the fractional number until the number 22 was exhausted?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That was your position. But notwithstanding you made that argument, you stated the bald constitutional proposition which I now read again, and which makes the point which I have stated.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will allow me, it is not necessary to read that again.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Am I making this speech, or the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am not surprised that my friend does not want to hear it read, but I propose to read it.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD (reading):

Now, it would not be in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution to give a greater representation to the fraction than to the integral numbers.

You state that as a proposition of law, and it is entirely true that your whole argument gives to that legal proposition an absolute contradiction, or, as some people say, the lie. Because you can not maintain that as a legal proposition and give any representation either to a majority or minority fraction, and your bill gives representation to 18 majority fractions.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. The gentleman knows that that was in connection with the question which came up between the integral number and the fraction; and I explicitly stated in my speech, and attempted to make it clear to every member of the House, that the Committee on the Census was giving representation to fractional numbers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I object to this interruption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wants to say that it is utterly out of the question to have an orderly debate in the House unless the rules of the House are observed. The rules of the House require that when a member rises he shall first address the Chair, and the rules also forbid one member to address another in the second person. The Chair hopes that members will conform to the rules of the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have allowed myself to be interrupted about twenty-five times in violation of the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. And the gentleman from Maine has violated the rule twenty-five times by addressing me in the second person. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It seems the gentleman from Illinois is getting very sensitive and technical now. [Laughter.] I will refer to him later in the third person, and later on I have no doubt I shall succeed in diminishing him so that I can refer to him in the fourth and fifth person. [Laughter.] And I hope to be able, during the progress of this debate, to eliminate him altogether. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. That is evidently the purpose of the gentleman's argument, and not in support of any bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I state again that the argument of the gentleman absolutely contradicts the proposition that he lays down. It simply illustrates this: It is true that no apportionment can be made of the membership of this House that is not made in a large degree in an arbitrary manner. The plan suggested by Mr. Walker never has produced the results desired—to give to all the States an equal and fair distribution in accordance even with its fundamental idea—and the plan suggested is based altogether on an arbitrary conclusion, because in every instance they stop in adding their fractions when they reach the number with which they started, independent of the fact of whether the majority fractions are still unused, and sometimes go into the minority fractions. That is precisely the proposition we maintain.

If the proposition set out by the gentleman so courageously in his speech were sound, no fractions would have any representation. If it is not sound, this committee leaves the representation to be based arbitrarily upon what the House deems to be fair and reasonable and right and just. The conclusion to be reached either by Mr. Walker's method or by the fourth method which is reported by the committee from the Census Office, which undertakes to reach results in this manner, takes an arbitrary ratio, or basis of representation—194,000, for instance—divides the population in each State for the purpose of getting the whole numbers, and the fractions left are disposed of by taking the majority fractions in their order until they are exhausted, and thus the membership of the House is reached by that method of computation, more simple, more plain, and more clear and direct and less subject to criticism than the complicated and peculiar system adopted by Mr. Walker and relied upon by both bills.

The minority bill is made up precisely according to the statement in the report of the committee; and following a precedent established by this House in 1872, it takes a table that is based upon the representation of 384, and when we find the representation of 384 under that table we find two States with majority fractions left out and unrepresented—Nebraska and Virginia. And the minority propose to add to the number as given in the 384 calculation Nebraska and Virginia, because they have each a majority fraction and are equally entitled to representation, except for the matter of the size of the fraction, as any other State having a majority fraction.

This bill stands upon a precedent which goes vastly farther than is necessary to justify even this legislation and this apportionment. I call attention to the report of Mr. Mercur, of the Committee on the Judiciary—a unanimous report—made in 1872, upon a bill which added to the membership of the House.

The report says:

> The recent action of Congress in increasing the size of the House to 283, in order to save 8 States from a diminution in the number of their Representatives, has inclined the committee to recommend a further increase of 9 members, making the whole number 292, which is believed to be the smallest number that, upon an equitable and constitutional apportionment, will leave each State with at least its present representation.
> In making this apportionment the committee have adopted the figures and tables which were prepared by the Interior Department and were before the House on a former occasion, apportioning 290 members.

Then follows the table, after which the committee continues:

> The committee, however, in addition to the 12 members assigned to fractions by the above table, assign one to New Hampshire and one to Florida, making in all a House of 292. The reason for this is that greater injustice will be done each of these States by not giving it the additional Representative than to the other States by giving it.

Those States came in at that time on a minority fraction because the Committee on the Judiciary believed it to be proper in order to make the representation fair and just.

The chairman of the committee assailed the minority report with great force and violence—I do not suppose he will have any objection to my recognizing that his argument was forcible or that it was violent. If those adjectives are too strong, I will withdraw them and modify my language somewhat in order to suit the tenderness and convenience of the gentleman from Illinois. In order to relieve his mind from any lingering doubt that he may have that this apportionment suggested in 1872 by the Committee on the Judiciary was justified upon constitutional provisions, I simply read a list of the names of the Judiciary Committee that reported unanimously in favor of adding two States with minority fractions after an apportionment had already been made.

I think I may assume that they thought they were proceeding in a constitutional manner; and I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this list of great lawyers, not for the purpose of suggesting any comparison in the way of ability between those lawyers and the gentleman from Illinois. God forbid that I should suggest that any of those men would in any way overshadow the gentleman from Illinois.

The Committee on the Judiciary that reported this measure and stood behind it as a constitutional proposition consisted of John A. Bingham, of Ohio; Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts; John A. Peters, of Maine; Ulysses Mercur, of Pennsylvania; Jeremiah M. Wilson, of Indiana; Milo Goodrich, of New York; Charles A. Eldridge, of Wisconsin; Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, and Clarkson N. Potter, of New York. The minority of this committee feel that they have behind them the opinion of at least respectable lawyers that the bill they present here is based upon sound constitutional principles. They do not deny that it is possible for the gentleman from Illinois, unaided and alone, to overwhelm even this list of ordinary lawyers; that is entirely possible; but we do not think it probable.

Now, what does the gentleman from Illinois do when he undertakes to criticise the bill of the minority? He takes the table that is found in the report on the basis of 386, when the report states that the bill is based upon the table reckoning 384 Representatives, adding for Nebraska and Virginia two, following the line of the report of the Judiciary Committee in 1872. The gentleman insists upon arguing the minority bill upon the basis of the table of 386, when he knows (for his attention was called to it again and again while he was making his speech) that he was acting disingenuously and unfairly, and undertaking to confuse this House. He would not tolerate interruptions; he would not allow questions. He said in his speech that he was not to be tied down to the report of the committee and the reasons they gave for the bill that they presented here.

He insisted on arguing the question on the basis of a bill providing for 386 Representatives. Why? Because he wanted to appeal to the prejudice of the great States of Pennsylvania and New York, which under the apportionment that you will find under the head of 386 will have one additional Representative each; and then he claims that the minority of the committee by undertaking to provide for a House of 386 members are depriving New York and Pennsylvania each of a Representative; and he spent half an hour of his speech in undertaking to analyze the report of the minority on a table which he knew it was not based upon, if he ever read that minority report.

> He wabbled in and wabbled out,
> Until the mind was left in doubt
> Whether the snake that made the track
> Was going south or coming back.

That was the attitude of the gentleman in connection with the report of the minority of this committee. Now, this, I think, leaves these bills standing before the House upon their respective constitutional bases.

I do not claim that the bill of the majority is unconstitutional. I say that it is based upon the same table that the bill of the minority is based upon, and the bill of the minority has this precedent in 1872 for adding these two majority fractions in the case of Nebraska and Virginia. Now, this presents these bills as they stand before the House on their constitutional bases, each standing equal with the other so far as the legal propositions are concerned.

What are the real considerations involved here between these two measures? The question is whether this House shall be increased in size to keep pace somewhat with the increase of our population.

Mr. LACEY. Before the gentleman passes to the other proposition, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask him whether he regards this as equality: Iowa has 2,231,853 people, while Maine has 694,466. Giving Maine 4 Representatives, if Iowa has three times as large a population as Maine and 38,465 more, ought not Iowa to have 12 members?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say in all frankness to the gentleman from Iowa that neither one of these bills can be analyzed so as to show equality on that basis. I have clearly in mind the analysis made by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. HOPKINS] of the bill of the minority, and it is upon that analysis, if I understand the gentleman from Iowa aright, that his question is largely based.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; if on the same basis Iowa should not have 12 members, with 38,000 people to spare.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I want to say this to the gentleman: Before I conclude my remarks, if I have the time, I will enter upon an analysis of the majority bill, using the same plan used by the chairman of the committee. I would not like to do it at this stage of the discussion, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Iowa, but I will agree to reach it. I intend to conclude with an analysis of the majority bill, made upon the same basis that the chairman of the committee used in his analysis of the minority bill, and I will demonstrate vastly greater inequalities, vastly greater discrepancies, than appeared in the analysis made by the chairman of the committee. I submit right here now, however—and I do not know that I may care to state it again—that that analysis and that method of undertaking to reach a result is, in my judgment, puerile, senile, and inane.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will notice, the bill of the majority gives Vermont 2 Representatives with 342,640 people. On that same basis Iowa would be given 13; but I think the majority bill gives her only 11.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. It shows that these inequalities in figuring out results will follow any system.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They are bound to occur. There is no question about it at all. But the gentleman from Iowa will bear in mind this fact, that the minority bill and the majority bill are based upon precisely the same method of computation. They have behind them the same mathematical principles, the same scientific propositions, if there are any. There is this distinction: The majority bill fails to give representation to three majority fractions. That is the result of the table. The minority bill gives representation to all of the majority fractions under that bill, and in that respect is consistent with the practice of the House since 1850. Am I not right in that?

Mr. LONG. That is right, and Iowa, under the computation, has a large minority fraction, but not a majority fraction.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa will notice that. The State of Iowa under the computation based on 384 Representatives has a large minority fraction, but not a majority fraction, and for that reason the State of Iowa was not included in the minority bill. The minority bill, in the first instance, was drawn upon the basis of the computation which you will find in Table No. 4, which I have just described as starting with an arbitrary ratio and dividing the population in the States, and then adding to the whole numbers all of the majority fractions. Do I make myself clear to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, this brings us, Mr. Speaker, to the real question involved in this controversy, whether or not this House should be enlarged, whether the people of this country, 74,000,000, should be represented here by 357 people or by 386, 387, or whatever the number may be determined to be. And I submit upon this proposition as fundamental that under our institutions with a popular government, republican in form, the representation that is in harmony with our ideas is the largest representation, the largest body to represent the smallest constituencies possible, and that the only limit to the size of the House upon that basis is a condition when the House reaches an unwieldy character and is incompetent and unable to perform its legislative functions in an orderly and speedy manner.

And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this House has not yet reached that stage. I submit that our proposition to increase the representation so far as may be in accordance with the increase of population, in accordance with the increase and the diversity of interests, is in accordance with this fundamental proposition and in accordance with the experience and practice of the Republic, uninterrupted except in one instance since the very beginning of our Government. And I submit further, Mr. Speaker, that this proposition of a large basis of representation in order that the representative body may be near the people, may represent their interests, may be familiar with their desires, may be capable of protecting their rights and preserving their liberties, and be large enough so that it can not under any circumstances be subjected to improper or irregular control, is the principle that should dominate this House in reaching its conclusions, whether it benefits Maine or whether it satisfies the desires of the chairman of this great committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Maine be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am greatly obliged to the gentleman. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we are in harmony with the views of the fathers who made the Government what it is and procured the adoption of the Constitution. We are not left to conjecture what views were entertained by the statesmen who founded the Republic.
